

Latin		English
QUÆSTIO IV.		QUÆSTIO IV.
Qua certitudine tenendum sit, propositiones damnatas ab Alexandro Septimo, die 24. Septembris 1665. & 18. Martii 1666. ad minus tanquam scandalosas, vere tales esse, prohibitas, & damnatas, & omni probabilitate carentes, & ab omni disputatione, tam publica, quam privata, nisi forsán impugnando, exulandas, & ad quid obligent hac Decreta?		With what certainty is it to be held that the propositions condemned by Alexander VII on the 24th day of September 1665 and the 18th of March 1666, at least as scandalous, are truly such, prohibited and condemned, and devoid of all probability, and to be banished from all disputation, public as well as private, unless perhaps by way of impugning them; and to what do these Decrees oblige?
1. SUPpono, prædictas opiniones ac Alexandro Septimo damnatas, esse quinque supra quadraginta, quas exscripsi in fine Tractatus de Appellationibus cum integris Decretis, à sua Sanctitate, hac de re editis, cum stricta prohibitione, sub præcepto, & excommunicatione lata, Summo Pontifici, pro tempore existenti reservata; contra quoscumque, quibuscumque etiam dignitatibus fulgentes, ne quis illas, aut conjunctim, aut divissim doceat, defendat, edat, aut de eis, etiam disputative, publice, aut privatim tractet, nisi forte impugnando: & ne prædictas opiniones, aut aliquam ipsarum ad praxim deducant, districte prohibet in virtute sanctæ obedientiæ, & sub interminatione divini judicii, omnibus Christi fidelibus cujuscumque conditionis, dignitatis, ac status, etiam specialissima nota dignis. Quæ omnia statuit, decrevit, ac prohibuit præfatus Alexander Papa Septimus, pro Tribunali sedendo in Sacra Congregatione Eminentissimorum Sanctæ Romanæ Ecclcsiæ Cardinalium, adversus hæreticam pravitatem Inquisitorum Generalium, pro universa Christiana Republica, eorum suffragiis sigillatim super unaquaque ipsarum opinionum auditis, & post sedulam, & accuratam dictarum opinionum discussionem, & examen præhabitu, nedum à pluribus in Sacra Theologia Magistris, sed ab eisdem postea Eminentissimis Dominis		1. I SUPpose that the aforesaid opinions condemned by Alexander VII are five above forty, which I have transcribed at the end of the Treatise de Appellationibus, together with the entire Decrees published by His Holiness upon this matter, with strict prohibition, under precept and excommunication latae sententiæ reserved to the Supreme Pontiff for the time being; against any persons whatsoever, though resplendent with whatsoever dignities, that no one teach, defend, or publish them, either jointly or severally, or treat of them, even disputatively, publicly or privately, unless perhaps by way of impugning them: and lest they reduce the aforesaid opinions, or any one of them, to practice, he strictly forbids it, in virtue of holy obedience and under the threat of the divine judgment, to all Christ's faithful of whatsoever condition, dignity, and state, even such as are worthy of most special mention. All which the aforesaid Pope Alexander VII established, decreed, and prohibited, sitting for tribunal in the Sacred Congregation of the Most Eminent Cardinals of the Holy Roman Church, Inquisitors General against heretical pravity for the universal Christian commonwealth, their votes having been heard one by one upon each single one of these opinions, and after a sedulous and accurate discussion and examination of the said opinions had beforehand, not only by very many Masters in Sacred Theology, but afterwards by the same Most Eminent Lords Cardinals as well. All which is plain from the said Decrees, which I render exactly at the end of my fifth Volume, entitled de Appellationibus.

Latin		English
Cardinalibus. Quod omne, ex dictis patet Decretis, quæ adamussim reddo in fine mei quinti Voluminis, de Appellationibus, inscripti.
2. Secundo suppono, Summos Pontifices aliquando suas facere declarationes, qua tales, & illæ ab eis, tanquam in Sede Apostolica Divi Petri sedentibus dimanant, & prodeunt; aliquando vero ab eis, non qua Vicariis Christi Domini, & successoribus Principis Apostolorum dependent, sed qua Doctoribus particularibus. De quo duplici procedendi modo in Declarationibus Summorum Pontificum, videndi veniunt Franciscus Suarez, tomo 4. de Religione, lib. 3. cap. 4. num. 8. in fine, & num. 11. pag. mihi 460. Cardinalis Bellarmineus, tom. 1. lib. 4. de Romano Pontifice, cap. 2. in principio, & cap. 6. Petrus Hurtado de Mendoza, tract. de Fide, disputat. 37. §. 2. Franciscus Amicus, tom. 4. dicto tract. disp. 2. sect. 4. num. 145. & 239. disp. 7. sect. 1. n. 37. Joannes de Cardenas, in Crisi Theologica, par 1. tract. 1. disp. 9. c. 20. art. 3.		2. Secondly I suppose that the Supreme Pontiffs sometimes make their declarations as such, and these issue and go forth from them as from men sitting in the Apostolic See of St. Peter; but sometimes they proceed from them, not as from Vicars of Christ the Lord and successors of the Prince of the Apostles, but as from particular Doctors. Concerning which twofold manner of proceeding in the Declarations of the Supreme Pontiffs, there are to be seen Francisco Suárez, tomo 4. de Religione, lib. 3. cap. 4. num. 8. in fine, & num. 11. pag. mihi 460. Cardinal Bellarmine, tom. 1. lib. 4. de Romano Pontifice, cap. 2. in principio, & cap. 6. Pedro Hurtado de Mendoza, tract. de Fide, disputat. 37. §. 2. Francisco Amico, tom. 4. dicto tract. disp. 2. sect. 4. num. 145. & 239. disp. 7. sect. 1. n. 37. Juan de Cárdenas, in Crisi Theologica, par 1. tract. 1. disp. 9. c. 20. art. 3.
3. Tertio suppono, Pontificem Summum, qua talem, aliquando declarare, decernere, & definire in Conciliis, illis interessendo, vel illa jam celebrata confirmando, aliquando adhibitis præviis consultationibus Sacrarum Congregationum S. Romanæ Ecclesiæ Cardinalium, & etiam ut in plurimum, plurimorum in Sacra Theologia, & in Ecclesiastica Disciplina Doctorum peritissimorum, nedum in publicum cœtum advocatorum, sed etiam privatim consultorum; & aliquando denique, præmissis informationibus, seu probationibus, per depositiones virorum fide dignorum receptis. De quibus Bellarmineus, dicto cap. 2. Amicus, disp. 7. sect. 1. citat. à num. 23. & signanter num. 36.		3. Thirdly I suppose that the Supreme Pontiff, as such, sometimes declares, decrees, and defines in Councils, either by being present at them or by confirming them when already celebrated; sometimes with previous consultations of the Sacred Congregations of the Cardinals of the Holy Roman Church employed, and also, as for the most part, of very many Doctors most skilled in Sacred Theology and in Ecclesiastical Discipline, not only summoned into a public assembly, but also consulted privately; and sometimes, finally, upon informations or proofs received through the depositions of men worthy of credence. Concerning which Bellarmine, dicto cap. 2. Amicus, disp. 7. sect. 1. citat. à num. 23. & signanter num. 36.
4. Quarto suppono, Summum Pontificem, qua talem definire res fidei, & ea, quæ ad mores in universum fidelium commodum spectant, in vim autoritatis, & potestatis Petro		4. Fourthly I suppose that the Supreme Pontiff, as such, defines matters of faith, and those things which pertain to morals for the universal good of the faithful, by force of the authority and power promised to Peter the Prince of the

Latin		English
Apostolorum Principi à Christo Domino, & in eo legitimis Pontificibus ejus successoribus promissæ Math. 16. Tu es Petrus, & super hanc petram ædificabo Ecclesiam meam: & porta inferi non prævalebunt adversus eam. Et Tibi dabo claves Regni Cælorum: quodcumque ligaveris super terram, erit ligatum, & in Cælis: & quodcumque solveris super terram, erit solutum & in Cælis: & traditæ; Lucæ 22. Ego rogavi pro te, ut non deficiat fides tua, & tu aliquando conversus, confirma fratres tuos: & etiam Joannis 21. Pasce agnos, & pasce oves meas: doctrina scilicet, nedum fidei, sed etiam morum. Videantur Canus, de Locis Theologicis, lib. 6. cap. 3. Suarez, tract. de Fide, disp. 5. sect. 8. num. 1. & 7. & tom. 4. de Religione, tract. 10. c. 4. num. 5. & 6. Cardin. Cajetanus, in Opusculis, tom. 1. tract. 3. de Romani Pontificis institutione, cap. 12. vers. Ad hujus, juncto vers. Arguitur, quo loci doctissime probat D. Petrum ex Christi institutione successorem habere in Pontificatu, & Primatu Ecclesiæ Catholicæ: & cap. 13. firmat, & probat, Romanum Pontificem succedere D. Petro in Pontificatu totius Ecclesiæ: & cap. 14. longam texti seriem autoritatum veterum Ecclesiæ Patrum, & Conciliorum affirmantium in Petro, & in Romano Pontifice, pro tempore Petri successore, totius Ecclesiæ Pontificatum institutum: Videlicet, Cyrili, Patriarchæ Alexandrini, in lib. Thesau. Cyrili, Patriarchæ Hierosolymitani. S. Anacleti Martyris. D. Chrisostomi, homil. 55. super Mathæum. Maximi, in epist. Orientalibus directa. Martelli Papæ, & Martyris, relati in cap. Rogamus vos, 24. quæstio 1. Cypriani Martyris, relatis in cap. Loquitur Dominus, eadem causa, & quæst. D. Ambrosii, relati in cap. Fidelior, 50. dist. & aliis in locis, D. Hieronymi, & D. Augustini, pluribus etiam in locis. D. Gregorii Magni, lib. 4. Registri, epist. 32. ad Mauritium Imperatorem. D. Leonis Primi, sermone 3. de Anniversario suæ assumptionis die. Venerabilis Bedæ, super illud Joannis 1.		Apostles by Christ the Lord, and in him to the legitimate Pontiffs his successors, Matt. 16. Thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my Church: and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it. And To thee will I give the keys of the kingdom of heaven: whatsoever thou shalt bind upon earth, it shall be bound also in heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt loose upon earth, it shall be loosed also in heaven: and delivered to him; Luke 22. I have prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not: and thou, being once converted, confirm thy brethren: and also John 21. Feed my lambs, and feed my sheep: the doctrine, namely, not only of faith, but also of morals. Let there be seen Cano, de Locis Theologicis, lib. 6. cap. 3. Suárez, tract. de Fide, disp. 5. sect. 8. num. 1. & 7. & tom. 4. de Religione, tract. 10. c. 4. num. 5. & 6. Cardinal Cajetan, in Opusculis, tom. 1. tract. 3. de Romani Pontificis institutione, cap. 12. vers. Ad hujus, juncto vers. Arguitur, in which place he most learnedly proves that St. Peter, by Christ's institution, has a successor in the Pontificate and in the Primacy of the Catholic Church: and cap. 13. he establishes and proves that the Roman Pontiff succeeds St. Peter in the Pontificate of the whole Church: and cap. 14. he weaves a long series of authorities of the ancient Fathers of the Church and of Councils affirming that in Peter, and in the Roman Pontiff, Peter's successor for the time being, the Pontificate of the whole Church was instituted: namely, of Cyril, Patriarch of Alexandria, in lib. Thesau. Cyril, Patriarch of Jerusalem. St. Anacletus Martyr. St. Chrysostom, homil. 55. super Mathæum. Maximus, in epist. Orientalibus directa. Martellus [?], Pope and Martyr, cited in cap. Rogamus vos, 24. quæstio 1. Cyprian Martyr, cited in cap. Loquitur Dominus, eadem causa, & quæst. St. Ambrose, cited in cap. Fidelior, 50. dist. and in other places; St. Jerome and St. Augustine, in very many places likewise. St. Gregory the Great, lib. 4. Registri, epist. 32. ad Mauritium Imperatorem. St. Leo I, sermone 3. de Anniversario suæ assumptionis die. The Venerable Bede, upon that text of John 1. And Jesus looking upon him. St. Bernard, in very many places, especially in Epist. 237. ad Eugenium III. Epist. 242. ad Romanos, quando discesserunt à Papa. Epist. 131. ad

Latin		English
Intuitus autem in eum Jesus. D. Bernardi, pluribus in locis, signanter in Epist. 237. ad Eugenium III. Epist. 242. ad Romanos, quando discesserunt à Papa. Epist. 131. ad Mediolanenses. D. Thomæ, in 4. contra Gentes, cap. 76. Concilii celebrati tempore Diocletiani, & Maximiani Imperatorum, relati, in cap. Nunc autem, 21. dist. Concilii Chalcedonensis. Concilii Carthaginensis. Concilii Milevitani. Concilii Constantiensis. Concilii Florentini.		Mediolanenses. St. Thomas, in 4. contra Gentes, cap. 76. The Council celebrated in the time of the Emperors Diocletian and Maximian, cited in cap. Nunc autem, 21. dist. The Council of Chalcedon. The Council of Carthage. The Council of Milevis. The Council of Constance. The Council of Florence.
5. Ad idem probandum, quam plures etiam cumulat autoritates Canus, dicto l. 6. c. 4. videlicet Anadeti Papæ in Epist. 1. de Oppressione Episcoporum. Evaristi. Sixti I. ad Gallicanas Ecclesias. Eleuterii, ad easdem Ecclesias. Pii I. in Epist. ad omnes Ecclesias. Victoris, in Epist. ad Theophilum. Zephirini in Epist. ad Episcopos Sicilianos, Marcelli, ad Episcopos Antiochenæ Ecclesiæ, Eusebii, ad Episcopos Campaniæ, & Tusciæ, Melchiadis, in Epist. ad Hispaniarum Episcopos, Marci, ad Athanasium, Julii, in Epist. ad Orientales Episcopos, & in Epist. ad Episcopos trium Conciliorum Africarum, & in Epist. ad Prosperum, & cæteros Numidiæ Orthodoxos Episcopos, Innocentii I. ad Concilium Carthaginense, & ad Milevitanum, Leonis, in epistola 54. ad Anastasium, & epist. 67. ad Episcopos provinciæ Viennensis, Gelasii, ad Anastasium, & in Decretis, quis cum septuaginta tulit Episcopis, & in epist. ad Episcopos Dardaniæ, Vigili, in Decretis suis, cap. ult. Pelagii II. ad Episcopos, qui convenerant in Constantinopolim, Gregorii I. in Epist. ad Augustinum. Anglorum Episcopum, aliorumque Pontificum, quorum testimonia habentur dist. 12. 17. 19. 20. 21. 22. & dist. 80. cap. Urbes, dist. 96. cap. Bene, & causa 24. q. 1. & extra, cap. Significasti, de Electione, cap. Antiqua, de Privilegiis, cap. Majores, de Baptismo, cap. Fundamenta, de Elect. in 6. Extravagantis unam sanctam,		5. To prove the same thing, Cano also heaps up as many authorities, dicto l. 6. c. 4., namely of Pope Anacletus in Epist. 1. de Oppressione Episcoporum. Evaristus. Sixtus I, ad Gallicanas Ecclesias. Eleutherius, ad easdem Ecclesias. Pius I, in Epist. ad omnes Ecclesias. Victor, in Epist. ad Theophilum. Zephyrinus, in Epist. ad Episcopos Sicilianos, Marcellus, ad Episcopos Antiochenæ Ecclesiæ, Eusebius, ad Episcopos Campaniæ, & Tusciæ, Melchiades, in Epist. ad Hispaniarum Episcopos, Mark, ad Athanasium, Julius, in Epist. ad Orientales Episcopos, & in Epist. ad Episcopos trium Conciliorum Africarum, & in Epist. ad Prosperum, & cæteros Numidiæ Orthodoxos Episcopos, Innocent I, ad Concilium Carthaginense, & ad Milevitanum, Leo, in epistola 54. ad Anastasium, & epist. 67. ad Episcopos provinciæ Viennensis, Gelasius, ad Anastasium, and in the Decrees which he passed with seventy Bishops, & in epist. ad Episcopos Dardaniæ, Vigilius, in Decretis suis, cap. ult. Pelagius II, ad Episcopos, qui convenerant in Constantinopolim, Gregory I, in Epist. ad Augustinum. Anglorum Episcopum, and of other Pontiffs, whose testimonies are had dist. 12. 17. 19. 20. 21. 22. & dist. 80. cap. Urbes, dist. 96. cap. Bene, & causa 24. q. 1. and in the Extra, cap. Significasti, de Electione, cap. Antiqua, de Privilegiis, cap. Majores, de Baptismo, cap. Fundamenta, de Elect. in 6. the Extravagant unam sanctam, renewed and afterwards approved by the Lateran Council under Leo X.

Latin		English
innovatæ, & approbatæ postea per Concilium Lateranense, sub Leone X.
6. Licet præter tot authoritates pro meo supposito firmando citatas, facile possem plures alias adducere, & cumulare, finem illis imponere duxi, recensendo Conc. Florentinum, sic definientem: Diffinimus Sanctam Apostolicam Sedem, & Romanum Pontificem in universum orbem tenere Primatum, & ipsum Romanum successorem esse B. Petri Principis Apostolorum, & verum Vicarium Christi, totiusque Ecclesiæ caput, & omnium Christianorum Patrem, ac Doctorem existere: & ipsi in B. Petro pascendi, regendi, & gubernandi universalem Ecclesiam à Dno. Nro. Jesu Christo plenam potestatem traditam esse, quemadmodum etiam in gestis Oecumenicorum Conciliorum, & in sacris Canonibus continetur: Hæc Florent. Concil. in Decreto Unionis Græcorum, &c. & pariter reddendo Cajetanum, dicto cap. 14. à n. 30. in sequentia prorumpentem: Prætereo (inquit) turbam Canonum, & Decretorum (quam dinumerare nemo potest) idem sentientium: Tam evidenter siquidem ex his, quæ attulimus, clarum est, Romanum Pontificem Petri successorem à Christo in Petro institutum esse totius Ecclesiæ Pastorem, ut locus dubitationi nullus relictus sit. Siquis autem post hæc hæsitans invenitur, aut rudis, aut ineptus, aut cum hæreticis, seu schismaticis sapit, aut certe Christianus non est, ineruditus quippe valde, & indocilis est quisquis certitudinem mathematicam in omnibus quærit, ut Philosophi tradunt. Hæreticorum, & schismaticorum proprium est sacra uti scriptura, secundum sensum tamen, quo ipsi faciunt illam sonare. Christianorum autem, qui vere Catholici sunt, sapientia sacram Scripturam intelligit secundum sensum, quem Sancti Doctores, quem Sacra Concilia, Apostolica autoritate roborata interpretantur. Hunc sciendi Christianam veritatem modum, quisquis		6. Although, besides so many authorities cited for the establishing of my supposition, I could easily adduce and heap up many others, I have thought to put an end to them by recounting the Council of Florence, thus defining: We define that the Holy Apostolic See and the Roman Pontiff hold the Primacy over the whole world, and that the Roman Pontiff himself is the successor of Blessed Peter the Prince of the Apostles, and the true Vicar of Christ, and the head of the whole Church, and the Father and Teacher of all Christians; and that to him, in Blessed Peter, full power of feeding, ruling, and governing the universal Church was delivered by Our Lord Jesus Christ, even as is also contained in the acts of the Ecumenical Councils and in the sacred Canons: Thus the Council of Florence, in Decreto Unionis Græcorum, &c. And likewise by rendering Cajetan, dicto cap. 14. à n. 30., breaking forth into what follows: I pass over (says he) the throng of Canons and Decrees (which no one can number) that hold the same: for from the things which we have brought forward it is so evidently clear that the Roman Pontiff, Peter's successor, was instituted by Christ in Peter as Pastor of the whole Church, that no place is left for doubt. But if anyone after these things is found hesitating, he is either untaught, or inept, or savors with the heretics or schismatics, or certainly is not a Christian; for whoever seeks mathematical certitude in all things is exceedingly unlearned and indocile, as the Philosophers teach. It is proper to heretics and schismatics to use the sacred Scripture, but according to that sense in which they themselves make it sound. But the wisdom of Christians who are truly Catholic understands the sacred Scripture according to that sense which the Holy Doctors, which the Sacred Councils strengthened by Apostolic authority, interpret. Whoever rejects this manner of knowing Christian truth is not a Christian: he who withdraws from this way is found an unbeliever. For if license to stray from this way be admitted, it is lawful to call into doubt with Arius the one substance of the Trinity; that the Holy Spirit also proceeds from the Son will still be ambiguous with the ancients; it is doubted

Latin		English
repellit, Christianus non est: ab hac via, qui recedit, infidelis invenitur. Nam licentia exorbitandi ab hac via, si admittitur, Trinitatis unam substantiam, revocare in dubium cum Ario fas est: Spiritum quoque Sanctum procedere à Filio, ambiguum adhuc cum priscis erit: panem in Sacramento Altaris converti in Corpus Christi dubitatur. Hæc enim omnia nulla alia via, aut autoritate sunt Christianis reddita certa, & indubia fide tenenda, nisi interpretatione Sacræ Scripturæ, juxta Sanctorum documenta, & Sacrorum Conciliorum, autoritate Apostolica confirmatorum, diffinitionem. Quo circa, quum textus Evangelici ad propositum adsint, & Sanctorum doctrina conformis in proposito pateat, nullo penitus Sanctorum reluctante, Sacrorumque Conciliorum cum Apostolica autoritate inveniatur diffinitio, omnisque Christianorum ætas à Petro hucusque in Sancta Ecclesia Catholica hoc confessa inveniatur, reliquorumque Doctorum testimonia innumera sint: certum ita redditur Romanum Pontificem Petri successorem, in Petro à Christo institutum, totius Ecclesiæ Pastorem, ut certior fides haberi non possit. Amen.		that the bread in the Sacrament of the Altar is converted into the Body of Christ. For all these things have been rendered certain to Christians, and to be held with undoubted faith, by no other way or authority than by the interpretation of Sacred Scripture according to the documents of the Saints, and by the definition of the Sacred Councils confirmed by Apostolic authority. Wherefore, since the texts of the Gospel are at hand to the purpose, and the doctrine of the Saints in agreement upon the point lies open, with not a single one of the Saints resisting, and since the definition of the Sacred Councils with Apostolic authority is found, and every age of Christians from Peter down to this day is found to have confessed this in the Holy Catholic Church, and the testimonies of the remaining Doctors are innumerable: it is thus rendered certain that the Roman Pontiff, Peter's successor, instituted in Peter by Christ, is the Pastor of the whole Church, so that a more certain faith cannot be had. Amen.
7. Hactenus Eminentissimus Cajetanus, quem sequitur illustrissimus Canus, Primarius Sacræ Theologiæ olim interpres in Salmanticensi Universitate, & postea Episcopus Canariensis, in suo doctissimo volumine, de Locis Theologicis, lib. 6. cap. 3. Proposit. 3. pag. mihi 215. sequentia proferens: Petro defuncto, divino jure esse, qui illi succedat in eadem autoritate, & potestate. Nam, cum oves Christi essent usque ad consummationem sæculi futuræ, desipiet profecto, qui Christum existimabit, ovili perpetuo Pastorem temporarium suffecisse. Quod igitur Dominus instituendo pastorale Ecclesiæ munus primo Pastori contulit, id ordinarie cuilibet successori intelligitur contulisse, ut Cajetanus, De Primatu		7. Thus far the Most Eminent Cajetan, whom the most illustrious Cano follows — formerly Primary interpreter of Sacred Theology in the University of Salamanca, and afterwards Bishop of the Canaries — in his most learned volume de Locis Theologicis, lib. 6. cap. 3. Proposit. 3. pag. mihi 215., putting forth what follows: that, Peter being dead, there is by divine right one who succeeds him in the same authority and power. For, since the sheep of Christ were to be until the consummation of the world, he will surely be a fool who shall think that Christ substituted a temporary Pastor for a perpetual sheepfold. What therefore the Lord, in instituting the pastoral office of the Church, conferred upon the first Pastor, that he is understood to have conferred ordinarily upon every successor whatsoever, as Cajetan, De Primatu Ecclesiæ Romanæ, c. 12., most eruditely proved.

Latin		English
Ecclesiae Romanæ, c. 12. eruditissime comprobavit.
8. Præterea, Regnum Christi futurum erat æternum: ergo & Ecclesiæ principatus non fuit temporalis. Alioqui, si Petri potestas ad posteros non est translata, nec cæterorum quidem Apostolorum potestatem ad succedentes Episcopos transmissam agnosceremus. Ita nunc in Ecclesia, nulla aut Episcoporum, aut Sacerdotum potestas erit. Qui est error in fide manifestus. Et inferius, post plura adducta testimonia, ex veteri Testamento desumpta, ad suam probandam propositionem addit: Non itaque, ut ad propositum revertamur, domus una sine patre familias, una civitas sine rectore, ovile unum sine pastore uno, mortuo Petro, relictum est, sed est aliquis, qui illi in regendi, ac pascendi oves autoritate succedat. Et rursus inferius prosequitur: Tantum ergo habet Summus à Christo institutus Pontifex in Ecclesia auctoritatem, quanta ad continendos Christianæ reipublicæ cives in fide, Religione, officio est necessaria: Suboriri autem inter nos necessum est de fide, ac Religione controversias, quibus componendis, si nullus est à Christo datus Judex ad quem referretur tandem hujusmodi quæstio omnis sine fine esset, perpetuaque dissensio, totque, tamque dissonantes de fide, ac de Religione sententiæ, quot sunt in Ecclesia, & quam sunt diversa capita. Quas ob res, si Ecclesiæ unitatem, charitatem, consociationem conservare oportet: necesse est profecto, ut unus sit relictus à Christo Princeps, qui non aliter, ac Petrus dissidentium lites dirimere, solvereque quæstiones possit. Hæc omnia Doctor ille, cui consonat Suarez, tract. de Fide, disputat. 5. sect. 8. n. 1.		8. Moreover, the kingdom of Christ was to be eternal: therefore neither was the principate of the Church temporary. Otherwise, if Peter's power has not been transferred to those who came after, neither shall we acknowledge that the power of the other Apostles was transmitted to the succeeding Bishops. Thus there will now be in the Church no power either of Bishops or of Priests. Which is a manifest error in the faith. And below, after very many testimonies drawn from the Old Testament have been adduced to prove his proposition, he adds: Not therefore, that we may return to our purpose, was one house left without a father of the family, one city without a ruler, one sheepfold without one shepherd, when Peter was dead; but there is someone who succeeds him in the authority of ruling and feeding the sheep. And again below he continues: Therefore the Supreme Pontiff instituted by Christ has as much authority in the Church as is necessary for containing the citizens of the Christian commonwealth in faith, in religion, in duty: But it must needs be that controversies concerning faith and religion arise among us, for the composing of which, if there be no Judge given by Christ to whom every such question might at length be referred, it would be without end, and there would be perpetual dissension, and as many and as dissonant opinions concerning faith and concerning religion as there are heads in the Church, and as diverse as those heads are. For which reasons, if the unity, charity, and fellowship of the Church must be preserved, it is surely necessary that one Prince be left by Christ, who, no otherwise than Peter, may be able to settle the disputes of those who disagree and to resolve questions. All this that Doctor, with whom Suárez agrees, tract. de Fide, disputat. 5. sect. 8. n. 1.
9. Quinto suppono, Summos Pontifices, qua Doctores particulares considerari posse, uno modo. Secundo, qua Pontifices, sed solos. Tertio, qua Pontifices, sed adjuncto solito Consiliariorum cœtu. Quarto, qua		9. Fifthly I suppose that the Supreme Pontiffs can be considered, in one way, as particular Doctors. Secondly, as Pontiffs, but alone. Thirdly, as Pontiffs, but with the accustomed assembly of Counsellors adjoined. Fourthly, as Pontiffs, but together with a General Council.

Latin		English
Pontifices, sed una cum Concilio Generali. Ita Cardinalis Bellarminus, tom. 1. lib. 4. de Potestate Spirituali Summi Pontificis, cap. 2. & alii communiter Doctores. Quinto, qua Pontifices, sed adjunctis consultoribus peritis, etiam si illos in cœtum non advocet publicum. Sic Franciscus Amicus, in Cursu Theologico, tom. 4. disput. 7. sect. 1. n. 36. Granado, mox citandus.		So Cardinal Bellarmine, tom. 1. lib. 4. de Potestate Spirituali Summi Pontificis, cap. 2. , and other Doctors commonly. Fifthly, as Pontiffs, but with expert consultors adjoined, even if he does not summon them into a public assembly. So Francisco Amico, in Cursu Theologico, tom. 4. disput. 7. sect. 1. n. 36. Granado, presently to be cited.
10. Sexto suppono, sententias, & Decreta Summi Pontificis, interdum versari in rebus universalibus, quæ toti proponuntur Ecclesiæ, qualia sunt Decreta de Fide, & præcepta generalia morum; interdum in rebus particularibus, quæ ad paucos pertinent, quales fere sunt omnes controversiæ facti, ut an talis sit promovendus ad Episcopatum, an jure fuerit promotus, an videatur deponendus. Ita Bellarminus ubi proxime. Granado, controv. 1. de Fide, tract. 7. disp. 2. sect. 1. num. 2. & seqq.		10. Sixthly I suppose that the sentences and Decrees of the Supreme Pontiff are sometimes concerned with universal matters, which are proposed to the whole Church, such as are the Decrees concerning Faith and the general precepts of morals; sometimes with particular matters, which pertain to few, such as are nearly all controversies of fact, as whether such a one is to be promoted to a bishopric, whether he was lawfully promoted, whether he seems to be deposed. So Bellarmine in the place just cited. Granado, controv. 1. de Fide, tract. 7. disp. 2. sect. 1. num. 2. & seqq.
11. Septimo suppono Summum Pontificem, etiam qua talem, & cum solo cœtu consiliariorum, immo & cum Concilio Generali, errare, posse in controversiis facti particularibus, quæ ex informatione, testimoniisque hominum præcipue pendent. Sic Bellarminus, loco præallegato, ex communi omnium consensu, tam Catholicorum, quam hæreticorum, & Granoldo, controvers 1. de Fide, tract. 7. disput. 3. sect. 5. n. 21. & 24.		11. Seventhly I suppose that the Supreme Pontiff, even as such, and with the assembly of counsellors alone, nay even with a General Council, can err in particular controversies of fact, which depend chiefly upon information and the testimonies of men. So Bellarmine, in the place already alleged, from the common consent of all, both Catholics and heretics, and Granado, controvers 1. de Fide, tract. 7. disput. 3. sect. 5. n. 21. & 24.
12. Octavo suppono, posse Summum Pontificem, ut privatum Doctorem errare, etiam in quætionibus universalibus juris, tam Fidei, quam morum; idque ex ignorantia, ut aliis Doctoribus interdum accidit. Ita docent Bellarminus, ubi supra , ex eodem communi consensu Catholicorum, & hæreticorum, & Amicus, dicta sect. 1. num. 37.		12. Eighthly I suppose that the Supreme Pontiff, as a private Doctor, can err even in universal questions of law, both of Faith and of morals; and that from ignorance, as sometimes happens to other Doctors. So teach Bellarmine, ubi supra , from the same common consent of Catholics and heretics, and Amicus, dicta sect. 1. num. 37.
13. Nono suppono, omnes Catholicos inter se convenire, sed non cum hæreticis, in hoc, quod Summus		13. Ninthly I suppose that all Catholics agree among themselves, though not with the heretics, in this: that the Supreme Pontiff, alone

Latin		English
Pontifex solus, vel cum suo particulari consilio aliquid in re dubia statuens, sive errare possit, sive non, sit ab omnibus fidelibus obedienter audiendus. Sic Bellarminus, dicto lib. 4. cap. 2. vers. Deinde, & cap. 5. vers. Ac ut rem, in fine, ibi: quanquam non est subditorum de hac re dubitare, sed simpliciter obedire. Et Suarez, de Fide, disp. 5. sect. 8. num. 9. ibi: quamvis etiam in his, non sit temere judicandum.		or with his particular council, determining something in a doubtful matter, whether he can err or not, is to be obediently hearkened to by all the faithful. So Bellarmine, dicto lib. 4. cap. 2. vers. Deinde, & cap. 5. vers. Ac ut rem, in fine, there: although it is not for subjects to doubt concerning this matter, but simply to obey. And Suárez, de Fide, disp. 5. sect. 8. num. 9., there: although even in these things nothing is to be judged rashly.
14. Decimo suppono, omnes Catholicos inter se convenire, licet non cum hæreticis, in hoc, quod summus Pontifex cum Concilio Generali errare non possit in condendis Fidei Decretis, nec in generalibus morum præceptis. Ita Bellarminus, dicto cap. 2. & versic. Deinde.		14. Tenthly I suppose that all Catholics agree among themselves, though not with the heretics, in this: that the Supreme Pontiff with a General Council cannot err in framing Decrees of Faith, nor in general precepts of morals. So Bellarmine, dicto cap. 2. & versic. Deinde.
15. Undecimo suppono, cum Diana Coordinato, tom. 9. tract. 5. resol. 1. n. 2. Bellarmino dicto cap. 2. vers. Secunda opinia, & cum Amico, tom. 4. disp. 7. sect. 1. num. 2. aliquos Catholicos Parisienses, Alphonsum de Castro, lib. 5. adversus hæreses, cap. 2. & Adrianum Sextum, in Quæstion. de Confirm. opinasse, Pontificem Summum, ut Pontificem, posse esse hæreticum, & hæresim docere, si absque Concilio Generali definiat, & de facto aliquando accidisse: quia infalibilitatem in rebus Fidei, non in Papa, sed in Ecclesia, aut in Concilio Generali constituunt, non tamen ut in subjecto, in quo formaliter resideat definiendi potestas, sed ut in prævia conditione, sine qua Spiritus Sanctus definitioni Pontificis non assistit, ut advertit Amicus, qui tamen melius sentit num. 36. quod ad hoc, ut Spiritus Sanctus more humano assistat Pontifici, controversias Fidei ex Cathedra definienti, sufficit, si antequam illas definiat, Doctores, & peritos consulat, etiam si illos in publicum cætum non advocet.		15. Eleventhly I suppose, with Diana Coordinatus, tom. 9. tract. 5. resol. 1. n. 2., Bellarmine dicto cap. 2. vers. Secunda opinia, and with Amicus, tom. 4. disp. 7. sect. 1. num. 2., that certain Catholics of Paris, Alfonso de Castro, lib. 5. adversus hæreses, cap. 2., and Adrian VI, in Quæstion. de Confirm., have opined that the Supreme Pontiff, as Pontiff, can be a heretic and teach heresy, if he defines without a General Council, and that this has in fact sometimes happened: because they place infallibility in matters of Faith not in the Pope, but in the Church or in a General Council; not, however, as in the subject in which the power of defining formally resides, but as in a previous condition without which the Holy Spirit does not assist the definition of the Pontiff, as Amicus notes, who nevertheless holds better, num. 36., that for the Holy Spirit to assist the Pontiff after the human manner, when defining controversies of Faith ex Cathedra, it suffices if, before he defines them, he consult Doctors and experts, even though he do not summon them into a public assembly.
16. Referunt dicti Authores pro opinione sua fundanda, plures Summos Pontifices, quos à Fide defecisse		16. The said Authors, for the founding of their opinion, adduce several Supreme Pontiffs whom they attest to have fallen away from the testantur: Videlicet Zephyrinum, Liberium, Marcellinum, Felicem, Leonem Primum, Gelasium, Anastasium, Vigilium, Honorium I. Gregorium III.		Faith: namely Zephyrinus, Liberius, Marcellinus, Felix, Leo I, Gelasius, Anastasius, Vigilius, Honorius I, Gregory III.

Latin		English
17. Eorum tamen opinio, improbabilis est in sententia. Malderi, 2. 2. q. 10. art. 1. & Uvigers ibidem, tract. de Pontifice, dub. 5. n. 177. apud Dian. resol. 4. num. 2. Quod sit temeraria tenent apud eundem, Stapletonius, contr. 3. q. 4. Castillus, lib. 3. Sentent. tom. 2. disp. 16. q. 6. n. 4. Aragonius, 2. 2. q. 1. de Pontifice, art. 10. Fragosus, de Republica, tom. 2. lib. 1. disp. 1. §. 3. & alii Quod sit hæretica, putat Diana n. 3. cum Suarez, de Fide, disp. 5. sect. 8. n. 4. Pitigiano, in 3. sentent. tom. 3. disp. 25. q. 2. art. 4. concl. 2. Valentia, tom. 3. q. 1. pun. 7. §. 4. Bannez, 2. 2. q. 1. art. 10. dub. 2. asserente Papam loquentem ex Cathedra extra Concilium, errare non posse, esse tanquam Apostolicam traditionem tenendum. Et cum Amico, in Cursu Theologico, tom. 4. disp. 7. q. 1. n. 33. Et quod adminus sententia Castri, Adriani Gerronis, & Almaini sit erronea, & hæresi proxima censetur à Bellarmino, dicto cap. 2. versic. Ex his, juncto vers. Secunda opinio, quod late probat cap. 3. ubi statuta hac assertione: Summus Pontifex, cum totam Ecclesiam docet, in his, quæ ad Fidem pertinent, nullo casu errare potest: primo illam probat ex illo Lucæ 22. Simon, Simon, ecce Satanas expetivit vos, ut cribaret sicut triticum, ego autem rogavi pro te, ut non deficiat fides tua, & tu aliquando conversus, confirma fratres tuos. Quem locum tripliciter exponit Cardinalis præfatus. Sed tertiam expositionem, quam ipse veram appellat, est, quod duo privilegia Petro Dominus impetravit, illa mediante rogatione: Unum, ut ipse non posset unquam Fidem amittere, quantumvis tentaretur à Diabolo, id, quod est aliquid amplius, quam donum perseverantiæ: dicitur enim perseverare usque in finem, qui licet interdum cadat, tamen resurgit, & in fine fidelis invenitur; at Petro Dominus impetravit,		17. Their opinion, however, is improbable in the judgment of Malderus, 2. 2. q. 10. art. 1., and Wiggers, ibidem, tract. de Pontifice, dub. 5. n. 177., in Diana, resol. 4. num. 2. That it is rash is held, in the same author, by Stapleton, contr. 3. q. 4., Castillo, lib. 3. Sentent. tom. 2. disp. 16. q. 6. n. 4., Aragón, 2. 2. q. 1. de Pontifice, art. 10., Fragosus, de Republica, tom. 2. lib. 1. disp. 1. §. 3., and others. That it is heretical, Diana thinks, n. 3., with Suárez, de Fide, disp. 5. sect. 8. n. 4., Pitigianis, in 3. sentent. tom. 3. disp. 25. q. 2. art. 4. concl. 2., Valentia, tom. 3. q. 1. pun. 7. §. 4., Bañez, 2. 2. q. 1. art. 10. dub. 2., who asserts that the Pope speaking ex Cathedra outside a Council cannot err, and that this is to be held as an Apostolic tradition. And with Amicus, in Cursu Theologico, tom. 4. disp. 7. q. 1. n. 33. And that at the least the opinion of Castro, Adrian, Gerson, and Almain is erroneous and next to heresy is judged by Bellarmine, dicto cap. 2. versic. Ex his, joined with vers. Secunda opinio, which he proves at large cap. 3., where, this assertion being laid down: The Supreme Pontiff, when he teaches the whole Church in those things which pertain to Faith, can in no case err: he first proves it from that of Luke 22. Simon, Simon, behold Satan hath desired to have you, that he may sift you as wheat: but I have prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not: and thou, being once converted, confirm thy brethren. Which passage the aforesaid Cardinal expounds in three ways. But the third exposition, which he himself calls the true one, is that the Lord obtained two privileges for Peter by means of that prayer: one, that he himself could never lose the Faith, however much he were tempted by the devil — which is something more than the gift of perseverance: for he is said to persevere unto the end who, although he sometimes fall, yet rises again, and at the end is found faithful; but for Peter the Lord obtained that he could never fall, as regards the Faith. Which privilege Diana grants to Peter, tom. 9. tract. 5. res. 12. n. 14.

Latin		English
ut non posset unquam cadere, quod ad Fidem attinet. Quod privilegium Petro concedit Diana tom. 9. tract. 5. res. 12. n. 14.
18. Alterum privilegium est, ut ipse tanquam Pontifex, non posset unquam docere aliquid contra Fidem; sive ut in Sede ejus nunquam inveniretur, qui doceret contra veram Fidem. Ex quibus privilegiis (inquit Bellarminus) primum fortasse, non manavit ad posteros; at secundum, sine dubio manavit ad posteros, sive successores.		18. The other privilege is that he himself, as Pontiff, could never teach anything against the Faith; or that in his See there should never be found one who should teach against the true Faith. Of which privileges (says Bellarmine) the first perhaps did not flow down to those who came after; but the second, without doubt, flowed down to those who came after, or to his successors.
19. Pro concessione primi privilegii, personæ Petri facta, adsunt plura Patrum testimonia; quæ recensere libet.		19. For the granting of the first privilege, made to the person of Peter, there are at hand very many testimonies of the Fathers; which it is well to recount.
D. Augustinus, lib. de Correptione, & gratia, cap. 8. sic dixit. Quando rogavit, ut non deficeret fides ejus, rogavit, ut haberet in Fide, liberrimam, fortissimam, invictissimam, perseverantissimam voluntatem.		St. Augustine, lib. de Correptione, & gratia, cap. 8. , spoke thus: When he prayed that his faith should not fail, he prayed that he might have in the Faith a most free, most strong, most invincible, most persevering will.
20. D. Chrisostomus, homilia 83. in Mathæum , ita fassus est. Non dixit, non negabis; sed ut non deficiat fides tua. Cura enim ipsius, & favore factum est, ne omnino Petri fides evanesceret.		20. St. Chrysostom, homilia 83. in Mathæum , thus confessed: He did not say, Thou shalt not deny; but, that thy faith fail not. For by his care and favor it came to pass that Peter's faith did not utterly vanish away.
21. Theophylactus, in cap. 22. Lucæ , similiter dixit. Quamvis brevi tempore concutiendus sis, habes recondita semina Fidei, etiam si folia abjecerit spiritus invadentis, radix tamen vivet, & non defitiet fides tua. Quem locum exponens Bellarminus, sic ait. Eleganti similitudine explicat, Petrum negando Christum amisisse confessionem Fidei, quæ ore fit, folia enim verba significant, Fidem tamen, qua corde creditur ad justitiam, non amisisse. Et addit, eodem modo exponere Prosperum, dictum Lucæ locum, lib de Vocatione gentium, cap. ultimo.		21. Theophylact, in cap. 22. Lucæ , said likewise: Although for a short time thou art to be shaken, thou hast the seeds of Faith hidden away; and even if the breath of the assailant cast off the leaves, yet the root shall live, and thy faith shall not fail. Expounding which passage, Bellarmine speaks thus: By an elegant likeness he explains that Peter, by denying Christ, lost the confession of Faith which is made with the mouth — for the leaves signify words — but that he did not lose the Faith by which one believes with the heart unto justice. And he adds that Prosper expounds the said passage of Luke in the same way, lib de Vocatione gentium, cap. ultimo.
22. Pro concessione secundi privilegii, etiam adsunt quam plurima testimonia Sanctorum, & veterum Patrum.		22. For the granting of the second privilege there are likewise at hand as many testimonies of the Saints and of the ancient Fathers.
Sanctus Lucius Primus, Papa, & Martyr, in Epistola 1. ad Episcopos Hispaniæ, & Galliæ , ita scripsit: Ecclesia Romana		Saint Lucius I, Pope and Martyr, in Epistola 1. ad Episcopos Hispaniæ, & Galliæ , wrote thus: The Roman Church is Apostolic, and the

Latin		English
Apostolica est, & mater omnium Ecclesiarum, quæ à tramite Apostolicæ traditionis nunquam errasse probatur, nec hæreticis novitatibus depravata succubuit, secundum ipsius Domini pollicitationem, dicentis: Ego rogavi pro te, &c.		mother of all Churches, which is proved never to have erred from the path of Apostolic tradition, nor to have succumbed, depraved by heretical novelties, according to the promise of the Lord himself, saying: I have prayed for thee, &c.
23. Felix Primus, in epist. ad Benignum, sic de Romana Ecclesia dixit: Et in exordio normam Fidei Christianæ percepit ab authoribus suis Apostolorum Christi Principibus, illibata manet, juxta illud, Ego rogavi pro te, &c.		23. Felix I, in epist. ad Benignum, thus spoke concerning the Roman Church: And in its beginning it received the norm of the Christian Faith from its authors, the Princes of Christ's Apostles; it remains unimpaired, according to that: I have prayed for thee, &c.
24. S. Leo Primus, sermone 3. de Assumptione sua ad Summum Pontificatum, ita loquutus est: Specialis cura Petri à Domino suscipitur, & pro fide Petri proprie supplicatus, tanquam aliorum status certior sit futurus, si mens Principis victa non fuerit. In Petro ergo omnium fortitudo munitur, & divinæ gratiæ ita ordinatur auxilium, ut firmitas, quæ per Christum Petro tribuitur, per Petrum Apostolis cæteris conferatur. Hæc Leo, ubi, juxta Bellarmini interpretationem, utrumque privilegium Petri cognoscit: primum, cum ait: Si mens Principis victa non fuerit; secundum, cum subjungit: Firmitas, quæ per Christum Petro tribuitur, per Petrum cæteris conferatur. Nam aliis firmitas non confertur, nisi veram Fidem exponendo.		24. St. Leo I, sermone 3. de Assumptione sua ad Summum Pontificatum, spoke thus: A special care of Peter is undertaken by the Lord, and prayer is made properly for the faith of Peter, as though the state of the others would be the more secure if the mind of the Prince were not overcome. In Peter therefore the fortitude of all is fortified, and the help of divine grace is so ordered that the firmness which is bestowed upon Peter through Christ may be conferred upon the other Apostles through Peter. Thus Leo; where, according to Bellarmine's interpretation, he recognizes both privileges of Peter: the first, when he says: If the mind of the Prince were not overcome; the second, when he subjoins: The firmness which is bestowed upon Peter through Christ is conferred upon the rest through Peter. For firmness is not conferred upon others save by setting forth the true Faith.
25. Agatho Papa, in Epist. ad Constantinum Imperatorem, quæ lecta est in sexta Synodo, actione 4. & postea act. 8. ab omnibus Patribus fuit probata, inquit: Vera Fidei regula, quam & in prosperis, & in adversis vivaciter tenuit Apostolica Christi Ecclesia, quæ per Dei gratiam à tramite Apostolicæ traditionis nunquam errasse probatur, nec hæreticis novitatibus unquam depravata succubuit, quia dictum est Petro: Simon, Simon, ecce Satanas, &c. Ego autem rogavi pro te, &c. hic Dominus fidem Petri non defecturam promissit, & confirmare eum fratres suos admonuit, quod Apostolicos Pontifices meæ		25. Pope Agatho, in Epist. ad Constantinum Imperatorem, which was read in the Sixth Synod, actione 4., and afterwards, act. 8., was approved by all the Fathers, says: The true rule of Faith, which both in prosperity and in adversity the Apostolic Church of Christ has vigorously held, which by the grace of God is proved never to have erred from the path of Apostolic tradition, nor ever to have succumbed, depraved by heretical novelties, because it was said to Peter: Simon, Simon, behold Satan, &c. But I have prayed for thee, &c. Here the Lord promised that Peter's faith should not fail, and admonished him to confirm his brethren; which it has always been acknowledged by all that the Apostolic Pontiffs,

Latin		English
exiguitatis prædecessores confidenter fecisse, semper cunctis est agnitum.		my predecessors in my littleness, have confidently done.
26. Nicolaus Primus, in Epist. ad Michaellem Imperatorem , dixit, Privilegia istius Sedis perpetua sunt divinitus radicata, atque plantata: impingi possunt, transferri non possunt, trahi possunt, evelli non possunt. Quæ ante Imperium vestrum fuerunt, permanent, Deo gratias, hactenus illibata, manebuntque post vos, & quousque Christianum nomen prædicatum fuerit, illa subsistere non cessabunt. Et infra, ostendens unde tam libere ejusmodi prædicaret, ait: Nam inter cætera, is per quem nobis præcipue ista sunt privilegia collata, Tu aliquando conversus, audivit à Domino, confirma fratres tuos.		26. Nicholas I, in Epist. ad Michaellem Imperatorem , said: The privileges of this See are perpetual, divinely rooted and planted: they can be assailed, they cannot be transferred; they can be dragged at, they cannot be torn up. Those which were before your Empire remain, thanks be to God, unimpaired hitherto, and shall remain after you; and so long as the Christian name shall be preached, they shall not cease to subsist. And below, showing whence he preached such things so freely, he says: For among the rest, he through whom these privileges were chiefly conferred upon us heard from the Lord, Thou, being once converted, confirm thy brethren.
27. Leo similiter Papa Nonus, in epist. ad Petrum Antiochenum , sic ut sequitur scripsit: Nimirum solus est, pro quo ne deficeret Fides ejus, Dominus, & Salvator asseruit se rogasse, dicens: Rogavi pro te, &c. Quæ venerabilis, & efficax oratio obtinuit quod hactenus fides Petri non defecit, nec defectura creditur in throno illius.		27. Pope Leo IX likewise, in epist. ad Petrum Antiochenum , wrote as follows: Assuredly he alone is the one for whom the Lord and Savior declared that he had prayed, that his Faith should not fail, saying: I have prayed for thee, &c. Which venerable and efficacious prayer obtained that hitherto the faith of Peter has not failed, nor is it believed that it will fail in his throne.
28. Innocentius Papa tertius, in epist. ad Episcopum Arelatensem , relata, in cap Majores, de Baptismo, & ejus effectum , dixit, Majores Ecclesiæ causas, præsertim articulos Fidei contingentes, ad Petri Sedem referendas intelligit, qui novit pro eo Dominum exorasse, ne deficiat fides ejus. Quibus pontificibus (ait Card. Bellarminus) videtur omnino credendum, tam, quod Sancti fuerint, tum, quod, sine dubio, ipsis præcipue debeat esse nota suæ Sedis autoritas.		28. Pope Innocent III, in epist. ad Episcopum Arelatensem , cited in cap Majores, de Baptismo, & ejus effectum , said: He understands that the greater causes of the Church, especially those touching the articles of Faith, are to be referred to the See of Peter, who knows that the Lord prayed for him, that his faith fail not. To which Pontiffs (says Cardinal Bellarmine) it seems that credence must altogether be given, both because they were Saints, and because without doubt the authority of their own See must be especially known to them.
29 Theophylactus, in cap. 21. Lucæ , loquens cum Petro nomine Christi, sic fassus est: Quia te habeo Principem Discipulorum, confirma cæteros. Hoc enim decet te, qui post me Ecclesiæ petra es, & fundamentum.		29 Theophylact, in cap. 21. Lucæ , speaking with Peter in the name of Christ, thus declared: Because I have thee as Prince of the Disciples, confirm the rest. For this befits thee, who after me art the rock and foundation of the Church.
30. D. Petrus Chrysologus, in epist. ad Euthychem , quæ adest tom. 1.		30. St. Peter Chrysologus, in epist. ad Euthychem , which is found in tom. 1. of the

Latin		English
Conciliorum, ante Chalcedonense, sic illi ait: Hortamur te frater honorabilis, ut his, quæ à beatissimo Papa Romanæ civitatis scripta sunt, obedienter attendas, quia beatus Petrus, qui in propria Sede vivit, & præsidet, præstat quærentibus fidei veritatem.		Councils, before the Chalcedonian, thus says to him: We exhort thee, honorable brother, that thou attend obediently to those things which have been written by the most blessed Pope of the city of Rome, because blessed Peter, who lives and presides in his own See, affords the truth of faith to those who seek it.
31. Et denique D. Bernardus, epist. 190. ad Innocent. Papam ita loquitur. Oportet ad vestrum referri Apostolatum pericula quæque, & scandala Regni Dei, ea præsertim, quæ de Fide contingunt. Dignum namque arbitror ibi potissimum resarciri damna Fidei, ubi non possit Fides sentire defectum. Cui enim alteri Sedi dictum est aliquando, Ego pro te rogavi, ut non deficiat Fides tua?		31. And lastly St. Bernard, epist. 190. ad Innocent. Papam , speaks thus: It is fitting that all dangers and scandals of the Kingdom of God be referred to your Apostolate, especially those which arise concerning the Faith. For I judge it worthy that the losses of the Faith be repaired chiefly there where the Faith cannot suffer defect. For to what other See was it ever said, I have prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not?
32. Secundo probat Bellarminus, Summum Pontificem, cum totam Ecclesiam docet, in his, quæ ad Fidem pertinent, nullo casu errare posse, ex promissione à Christo Domino D. Petro facta, Mathæi 16. ibi: Super hanc petram ædificabo Ecclesiam meam, & porta inferi non prævalebunt adversus eam. Quia ad litteram petra, & fundamentum Ecclesiæ dicitur Petrus, ut Summus Rector Ecclesiæ, uti demonstrat idem Cardinalis, tom. 1. lib. 1. cap. 10. & proinde ait, quilibet ejus successor, similiter est petra, & fundamentum Ecclesiæ.		32. Secondly Bellarmine proves that the Supreme Pontiff, when he teaches the whole Church in those things which pertain to Faith, can in no case err, from the promise made by Christ the Lord to St. Peter, Matt. 16. , there: Upon this rock I will build my Church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it. Because to the letter Peter is called the rock and foundation of the Church, as Supreme Ruler of the Church, as the same Cardinal demonstrates, tom. 1. lib. 1. cap. 10. ; and therefore, he says, any successor of his whatsoever is likewise the rock and foundation of the Church.
33. Tertio idem probat, ex illo Joannis ultimo: Pasce oves meas: sub quibus verbis demonstrat, dicto lib. 1. cap. 14. 15. & 16. Pontificem fuisse institutum Pastorem, & Doctorem totius Ecclesiæ. Ex quo infert: Ergo tota Ecclesia illum audire, & sequi tenetur. Ergo si ille erret, tota Ecclesia errabit.		33. Thirdly he proves the same from that of the last chapter of John: Feed my sheep: under which words he demonstrates, dicto lib. 1. cap. 14. 15. & 16. , that the Pontiff was instituted Pastor and Doctor of the whole Church. From which he infers: Therefore the whole Church is bound to hear and follow him. Therefore if he err, the whole Church will err.
34. Quarto , & ultimo probat errare non posse Pontificem in fide, cum totam docet Ecclesiam, ex duplici experimento. Primum est, quod omnes Patriarchales Sedes à Fide defecerunt, ita ut hæretici, & hæresim profitentes in eis sederint, excepta Romana Sede, ut habetur in forma reconciliationis Ecclesiarum, quæ à Romana defecerant, perscripta per Bonifacium Papam		34. Fourthly and lastly he proves that the Pontiff cannot err in faith when he teaches the whole Church, from a twofold experiment. The first is that all the Patriarchal Sees fell away from the Faith, so that heretics, and men professing heresy, have sat in them, the Roman See excepted, as is had in the form of reconciliation of the Churches which had fallen away from the Roman, written out by Pope Boniface II, in epist. ad eulalium Episcopum

Latin		English
Secundum, in epist. ad eulalium Episcopum Cartaginensem; per Ormisdam Papam, in epist. ad Episcopos Hispaniæ missa; & data per Adrianum Papam, ad Octavam Synodum Generalem, & à Cano recensita, de Locis Theologicis, lib. 6. cap. 4. in fine, in qua habetur: Non potest Domini Nostri Jesu Christi prætermitti sententia dicentis: Tu es petrus, & super hanc petram ædificabo Ecclesiam meam: & hæc, quæ dicta sunt, rerum probantur effectibus; quia in Sede Apostolica extra maculam semper est Catholica servata religio. Idem Canus cap. 6. recenset Sextam Synodum Generalem, in actione 4. continere professionem Fidei, quam Agatho Papa ad Concilium ipsum missit, sub tenore isto: Beati Apostoli adnitente præsidio, hæc Apostolica ejus Ecclesia nunquam à via veritatis in qualibet erroris parte deflexa est. Et infra. Hæc enim Apostolica Christi Ecclesia per Dei gratiam à tramite Apostolicæ traditionis nunquam errasse probabitur; nec hæreticis novitatibus depravata suetubuit: sed ut ab exordio Christianæ Fidei percepit ab auctoribus suis Apostolorum Christi Principibus illibata finetenus permanet secundum ipsius Domini Salvatoris divinam pollicitationem: Petre, Petre, ecce Sathan expetivit vos, &c. Ego autem pro te rogavi, ut non deficiat Fides tua: Et tu confirma fratres tuos. Quod Apostolicos meos prædecessores confidenter fecisse semper est cognitum. Hactenus S. Agatho Papa, Siculus, ex Benedictinis assumptus, ut testantur Arnoldus Uvion, tom. 1. p. 131. Azorius, part. 1. lib. 12. cap. 21. quæst. 2. Tritensius, de Viris Illustribus lib. 1. c. 5. San Vitores, en el Sol del Occidente, to. 1. prelud. 8. Yepes, en la Coronica General, tom. 2. fol. 327. 329. 331. 332. y 289.		Cartaginensem; by Pope Hormisdas, in epist. ad Episcopos Hispaniæ missa; and given by Pope Adrian to the Eighth General Synod, and recounted by Cano, de Locis Theologicis, lib. 6. cap. 4. in fine, in which is had: The sentence of Our Lord Jesus Christ cannot be passed over, who says: Thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my Church: and these things which have been said are proved by the effects of events; because in the Apostolic See the Catholic religion has always been preserved without stain. The same Cano, cap. 6., recounts that the Sixth General Synod, in actione 4., contains the profession of Faith which Pope Agatho sent to that same Council, under this tenor: By the aid of the blessed Apostle assisting, this his Apostolic Church has never been turned aside from the way of truth into any part whatever of error. And below: For this Apostolic Church of Christ, by the grace of God, shall be proved never to have erred from the path of Apostolic tradition; nor has it succumbed, depraved by heretical novelties: but as from the beginning of the Christian Faith it received from its authors, the Princes of Christ's Apostles, so it remains unimpaired unto the end, according to the divine promise of the Lord Savior himself: Peter, Peter, behold Satan hath desired to have you, &c. But I have prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not: And do thou confirm thy brethren. Which it has always been known that my Apostolic predecessors have confidently done. Thus far St. Agatho, Pope, a Sicilian, taken from among the Benedictines, as Arnold Wion attests, tom. 1. p. 131., Azor, part. 1. lib. 12. cap. 21. quæst. 2., Trithemius, de Viris Illustribus lib. 1. c. 5., San Vitores, en el Sol del Occidente, to. 1. prelud. 8., Yepes, en la Coronica General, tom. 2. fol. 327. 329. 331. 332. y 289.
35. Non tamen ignoro, secundum aliquorum sententiam, plures Summos Pontifices, à Fide Catholica defecisse; quam refert Franciscus Amicus, & eos, qui hac afficiuntur nota, in Cursu Theologico, tom. 4. disput. 7. sect. 1. Ad		35. I am not, however, ignorant that, according to the opinion of some, several Supreme Pontiffs have fallen away from the Catholic Faith; which opinion Francisco Amico relates, together with those who are branded with this mark, in Cursu Theologico, tom. 4. disput. 7.

Latin		English
quam respondet, num. 37. primo, in genere, & universaliter, nullum ex dictis Pontificibus, in rebus Fidei errasse, ut Pontificem, hoc est, ut docentem Ecclesiam ex Cathedra: cujus signum (inquit) est, quia nullus affertur, qui suum errorem, in quem, ut privata persona lapsus fuit, Ecclesiæ, sequendum proponit; ad eumque fide divina credendum illam adstringit, & obligat. Quæ certe responsio comprobatur autoritatibus decem, modo redditus, quarum prima est Sancti Lucii Primi, Papæ, & Martyris, & ultima Sancti Bernardi. Et hoc quidem, & nihil amplius intendimus probare, cum Cardinali Bellarmino concessisse Christum Dominum D. Petro, & successoribus ejus, in secundo privilegio, de quo supra, num. 18.		sect. 1. To which he replies, num. 37., first, in general and universally, that none of the said Pontiffs erred in matters of Faith as Pontiff, that is, as teaching the Church ex Cathedra: the sign of which (says he) is that not one is adduced who proposed to the Church, to be followed, the error into which he had fallen as a private person, and who bound and obliged her to believe it with divine faith. Which reply is certainly confirmed by the ten authorities just now rendered, of which the first is that of Saint Lucius I, Pope and Martyr, and the last that of Saint Bernard. And this indeed, and nothing more, do we intend to prove, together with Cardinal Bellarmine: that Christ the Lord granted to St. Peter and to his successors the second privilege, concerning which above, num. 18.
36. Deinde sigillatim respondet pro quolibet dictorum Pontificum, quos recensui, n. 16. pro ut sequitur. Pro Zephyrino, rem esse suspectam, an etiam ut personam privatam, hæresim approbaverit. Quoad Liberium, ait, rem videri certam, quod tædio exilii Arianorum hæresi subscripserit, ut privatam personam, ad evitandam exilii pœnam, non vero ut Pontificem ex Cathedra docentem, & extrinsice hæresi consensisse, sicut Marcellinus idololatriæ. Quoad Felicem dicit, quod licet Arianis communicaverit antequam verus esset Pontifex, quando scilicet Liberius in exilio vivebat, ubi autem verus fuit Pontifex factus, nedum ab Arianorum abstinuit communione, sed Constantinum Imperatorem, ut hæreticum damnavit. Quoad Leonem Primum inquit Amicus, falso ab adversariis interpretari. Quoad Gelasium vero, quod liber contra Euthicem, illius non sit, sed Genadii, vel Gelasii Episcopi Cæsariensis. Item quoad Anastasium dicit, quod esto ille cum Photino hæretico communicaverit, potuisse, ut privata persona cum illo communicare, sine hæresis approbatione; & esto approbaverit, num propterea ille ut Pontifex ex Cathedra		36. Next he replies severally for each of the said Pontiffs whom I recounted, n. 16., as follows. For Zephyrinus, that the matter is doubtful whether even as a private person he approved heresy. As to Liberius, he says that the matter seems certain, that from weariness of exile he subscribed to the heresy of the Arians, as a private person, to avoid the penalty of exile, but not as Pontiff teaching ex Cathedra, and that he consented to the heresy extrinsically, as Marcellinus to idolatry. As to Felix he says that, although he communicated with the Arians before he was true Pontiff, namely while Liberius was living in exile, yet when he had been made true Pontiff, he not only abstained from the communion of the Arians, but condemned the Emperor Constantine as a heretic. As to Leo I, Amicus says that he is falsely interpreted by the adversaries. But as to Gelasius, that the book against Eutyches is not his, but Gennadius's, or that of Gelasius Bishop of Caesarea. Likewise as to Anastasius he says that, granted that he communicated with Photinus the heretic, he could have communicated with him as a private person, without approbation of the heresy; and granted that he approved it, did he therefore err as Pontiff teaching ex Cathedra? As to Vigilius he says: that he wrote a letter confirming the heresy of the Monothelites, yet without obliging the faithful to embrace it, and at a time

Latin		English
docens erravit? Quoad vigiliū ait: scripsisse epistolam confirmantem hæresim Monothelitarum, non tamen obligando fideles ad illam amplectendam, & quando non erat verus Pontifex, sed Antipapa in schisma contra Silverium. Quoad Honorium Primum dicit, quod quidquid sit, an inciderit in dictam Monothelitarum hæresim, certum est non in eam consensisse, ut Pontifex illam ex Cathedra docendo, & ad eam Ecclesiam obligando, sed ut privatus homo. Et quoad Gregorium Tertium, falsum esse, concessisse propter quancumque infirmitatem impediētem usum matrimonii, virum aliam ducere uxorem, sed propter infirmitatem reddentem naturaliter impotentem ad coitum, ut propter nimiam arctitudinem,		when he was not true Pontiff, but Antipope in the schism against Silverius. As to Honorius I he says that, whatever be the case whether he fell into the said heresy of the Monothelites, it is certain that he did not consent to it as Pontiff teaching it ex Cathedra and obliging the Church to it, but as a private man. And as to Gregory III, that it is false that he granted that a man might take another wife on account of any infirmity whatsoever impeding the use of matrimony, but on account of an infirmity rendering him naturally impotent for intercourse, as on account of excessive narrowness,
37. In aliis autem Patriarchalibus Sedibus, certum est sedisse hæreticos, & hæresim publice profitentes, & non solum qua privatas personas, sed qua illarum Pontificos. Nam in Constantinopolitana, teste Cardinali Bellarmino tom. 1. libro 4. de Potestate spirituali Summi Pontificis, cap. 2. sederunt Macedonius, Nestorius, & Sergius hæresiarchæ. In Alexandrina, Georgius, & Lucius Ariani, Dioscorus, Euthychianus, Cyrus Monothelita, & alii. In Hierosolymitana, Joannes Origenista, & ante eum, Euthychius, Irenæus, Hilariusque Ariani sederunt. Et in Antiochena, Paulus Samosetanus hæresiarcha, Petrus Gnaphæus, Euthychianus, Macharius, Monothelita, & alii. Nihil tamen tale de Romana Sede ostendi potest, juxta supra dicta, & juxta dictum Ruffini, in Expositione Symboli, videlicet: In Ecclesia Urbis Romæ, neque hæresis ulla sumpsit exordium, & mos ibi servatur antiquus. Ex quo apparet Christum pro illa rogasse, ut non deficeret Fides ejus.		37. But in the other Patriarchal Sees it is certain that heretics have sat, and men publicly professing heresy, and not only as private persons, but as Pontiffs of those Sees. For in the Constantinopolitan, as Cardinal Bellarmine attests, tom. 1. libro 4. de Potestate spirituali Summi Pontificis, cap. 2., there sat Macedonius, Nestorius, and Sergius, heresiarchs. In the Alexandrian, George and Lucius the Arians, Dioscorus the Eutychian, Cyrus the Monothelite, and others. In the Jerusalemite, John the Origenist, and before him Eutychius, Irenæus, and Hilary, Arians, sat. And in the Antiochene, Paul of Samosata the heresiarch, Peter Gnaphæus the Eutychian, Macarius the Monothelite, and others. Yet nothing of the kind can be shown concerning the Roman See, according to what has been said above, and according to the saying of Rufinus, in Expositione Symboli, namely: In the Church of the City of Rome no heresy has ever taken its beginning, and there the ancient custom is preserved. From which it appears that Christ prayed for it, that its Faith should not fail.
38. Secundum experimentum ex quo probat Bellarminus dicto libro 4. cap. 3. Summum Pontificem, cum totam Ecclesiam docet in his, quæ ad Fidem pertinent, errare non posse, etiam si ad		38. The second experiment from which Bellarmine proves, dicto libro 4. cap. 3., that the Supreme Pontiff, when he teaches the whole Church in those things which pertain to Faith, cannot err, even if he employ no General

Latin		English
id Concilio non utatur Generali est, quoniam plurimas hæreses damnavit Papa, sine Concilio Generali. Jovinianum enim Siricius Papa, primo Romæ damnavit, & secundo à Synodo Mediolanensi de ipsius autoritate celebrata, ut constat ex Sircii epistola ad Ecclesiam Mediolanensem, quæ habetur la 2 tomo 1. Epistola Romanorum Pontificum & ex Henrico Spondano, in Compend. Baronii, Anno Christi 390. & 6. Siricii, num. 7.		Council for it, is that the Pope has condemned very many heresies without a General Council. For Pope Siricius first condemned Jovinian at Rome, and secondly he was condemned by the Synod of Milan celebrated upon his authority, as is evident from Siricius's letter to the Church of Milan, which is had la 2 tomo 1. Epistola Romanorum Pontificum, and from Henri de Sponde, in Compend. Baronii, Anno Christi 390. & 6. Siricii, num. 7.
39. Pelagium etiam damnavit primo, dictus Siricius, in dicto Joviniano, à quo hæresim hausit, & sumpsit ipse Pelagius, uti utrumque testatur D. Hieronymus, lib. 2. contra Pelagium, & in Jeremiam, Præfat. libro. 4. Postea vero fuit Pelagius in Concilio Carthaginensi damnatus. Sic enim ait Spondanus, Anno Christi 412. num. 5. Quod vero audis de Cælestii Carthagine primo iudicio; haud velim existimes, ipsam Pelagianam hæresim in Synodo Carthaginensi primum fuisse damnatam. Et enim S. Prosper, Carm. de Ingrat. hæc spectans oculis, constanter affirmat, primitus contigisse Romæ damnari: more nimirum majorum, ut nova emergens hæresis primum omnium, à prima omnium Sede examinaretur, & damnaretur.		39. Pelagius also the said Siricius first condemned, in the said Jovinian, from whom Pelagius himself drew and took his heresy, as St. Jerome attests of both, lib. 2. contra Pelagium, & in Jeremiam, Præfat. libro. 4. But afterwards Pelagius was condemned in the Council of Carthage. For thus says Spondanus, in the year of Christ 412, num. 5. But as to what you hear concerning the first judgment of Caelestius at Carthage, I would by no means have you think that the Pelagian heresy itself was first condemned in the Synod of Carthage. For St. Prosper, Carm. de Ingrat., beholding these things with his own eyes, constantly affirms that it first befell that it was condemned at Rome: after the manner, namely, of our forefathers, that a newly emerging heresy should first of all be examined and condemned by the first of all Sees.
40. Cælestii etiam hæresis, damnata etiam fuit à Siricio Papa, priusquam à Concilio damnaretur Carthaginensi: quia uti ait Spondanus, ubi proxime, numero 4. Cælestius, primarius Pelagii discipulus fuit. Unde si Pelagiana hæresis à Siricio Papa, qui præcessit dictum Carthaginense Concilium, fuit in Joviniano damnata, damnata etiam ab eodem Siricio fuit; Cælestii, Pelagii primarii discipuli, hæresis.		40. The heresy of Caelestius also was condemned by Pope Siricius before it was condemned by the Council of Carthage: because, as Spondanus says in the place just cited, numero 4., Caelestius was the foremost disciple of Pelagius. Whence, if the Pelagian heresy was condemned in Jovinian by Pope Siricius, who preceded the said Council of Carthage, the heresy of Caelestius, Pelagius's foremost disciple, was also condemned by the same Siricius.
41. Manes, alias Manichæus hæresiarcha, ex agitatus fuit ab Anastasio Papa Romæ, ut Author est Spondanus, Anno 402. numero 13. Bonifaciusque Primus, interpellatus libello accusationis à Clericis Ecclesiæ Valentinæ in Gallia, adversus Maximum		41. Manes, otherwise the heresiarch Manichæus, was harried at Rome by Pope Anastasius, as Spondanus is author, in the year 402, numero 13. And Boniface I, appealed to by a bill of accusation from the Clerics of the Church of Valence in Gaul against Maximus, the Manichaean Bishop, delegated the cause to

Latin		English
Episcopum Manichæum; delegavit causam cognoscendam Episcopis septem provinciarum. Idem Spondanus, Anno 419. numero 15. Leo etiam Magnus, Romæ latentes Manichæos, persequi cœpit, eorumque codices omnes incendit. Ita Spondanus, Anno 443. numero 1. quo loci addit, ex Prospero, in Chronico industriam, & diligentiam Leonis, in perquirendis Romæ Manichæis, fuisse illi divinitus inspiratam, & non solum Urbi, sed etiam Orbi universo plurimum profuisse; dum confessionibus in Urbe captorum, qui Doctores eorum, qui Episcopi, quive presbyteri, in quibus provinciis, vel civitatibus degerent, patefactum est, multosque Orientalium etiam partium Antistites, industriam Rectoris imitatos esse. Hæc Spondanus.		be examined to the Bishops of seven provinces. The same Spondanus, in the year 419, numero 15. Leo the Great also began to persecute the Manichæans lurking at Rome, and burned all their books. So Spondanus, in the year 443, numero 1., in which place he adds, from Prosper in Chronico, that the industry and diligence of Leo in searching out the Manichæans at Rome was divinely inspired in him, and profited very greatly not only the City but also the whole world; since by the confessions of those seized in the City it was laid open who were their Doctors, who their Bishops, and who their presbyters, and in what provinces or cities they dwelt; and that very many Prelates even of the Eastern parts imitated the industry of the Ruler. Thus Spondanus.
Et ut dicta evidentiora reddantur, libet recensere plures damnationes hæresum, & hæreticorum à Pontificibus sine Concilio Generali factas; post ultimum enim, quod fuit Tridentinum, à Pio IV. confirmatum 7. Kalend. Februarii, 1563. idem Papa, Pridie Kalen. Aprilis ejusdem anni, damnavit Oddetum à Castillione Cardinalem, & Episcopum Betvacensem, in hæresim Hugunototum prolapsus. De qua condemnatione edidit Bullam, la 66. apud Angel. Cherubin. tomo 2. Bullarii. Pius V. Elisabeth Angliæ Reginam, hæreticam, & hæreticorum faultricem declaravit, de Sedis Apostolicæ plenitudine, 5. Kalendarum Maji, 1570. in Bulla 101. dicti Bullarii. Innocentius X. in Constit. sua 31. apud tomum 4. dicti Bullarii, pridie Kalendarum Junii, 1653. damnavit tanquam hæreticas, quinque Cornelii Jansenii propositiones, de quarum damnatione videri etiam potest Diana Coordin. tom. 9. tract. 5. resol. Idem Innocentius, in Decreto S. Congregationis supremæ, & Generalis Inquisitionis, 15. Januarii, 1654. edito, quod penes me habeo in Typografia Rever. Cameræ Apost. Impresum, hanc tanquam hæreticam damnavit propositionem: La jurisdiction		And that what has been said may be rendered more evident, it is well to recount several condemnations of heresies and of heretics made by the Pontiffs without a General Council; for after the last, which was that of Trent, confirmed by Pius IV on the 7th of the Kalends of February 1563, the same Pope, on the day before the Kalends of April of the same year, condemned Odet de Châtillon, Cardinal and Bishop of Beauvais, as fallen into the heresy of the Huguenots. Concerning which condemnation he issued a Bull, la 66. apud Angel. Cherubin. tomo 2. Bullarii. Pius V declared Elizabeth Queen of England a heretic and a fosterer of heretics, out of the plenitude of the Apostolic See, 5. Kalendarum Maji, 1570. in Bulla 101. dicti Bullarii. Innocent X, in his Constitution 31, in tomum 4. of the said Bullarium, on the day before the Kalends of June 1653, condemned as heretical five propositions of Cornelius Jansen, concerning whose condemnation Diana Coordinatus may also be seen, tom. 9. tract. 5. resol. The same Innocent, in the Decree of the Sacred Supreme Congregation and General Inquisition, published 15 January 1654, which I have by me printed in the Printing-house of the Reverend Apostolic Chamber, condemned this proposition as heretical: The ecclesiastical jurisdiction which belongs to His Holiness as Pontiff, outside his temporal territory, regards

Latin		English
Ecclesiastica, que toca à su Sanctidad, como à Pontifice, fuera de su territorio temporal, respicit causas, & personas, y à determinadas causas, y persoas se restringe, y en ellas solamente se puede exercitar, pero el territorio, no es suyo, sino del Rey, y assi como quien exercita juridicion en ageno territorio, tiene obligacion à pedir el beneplacito al dueno de la juridicion de aquel territorio, assi quando sin tener juridicion de territorio quiere el Pontifice exercitarla, en el de Rey sobre las causas, o personas, en quien le toca, debe permitir, se examinen por el Principe temporal sus rescriptos, para que reconozca si son de su juridicion las causas, y personas, que en ellos se contienen.		causes and persons, and is restricted to determinate causes and persons, and in these alone can it be exercised; but the territory is not his, but the King's; and so, just as one who exercises jurisdiction in another's territory is obliged to ask the good pleasure of the lord of the jurisdiction of that territory, so when the Pontiff, not having jurisdiction of territory, wishes to exercise it in the King's, over the causes or persons in which it belongs to him, he ought to permit his rescripts to be examined by the temporal Prince, so that the latter may recognize whether the causes and persons contained in them are of his jurisdiction.
42. Et plures alias hæreses damnavit Papa, sine Concilio Generali, ait Cardinalis Bellarminus loco præallegato, quas eo ipso pro veris hæresibus tota Christi Ecclesia habuit, & exhorruit, quod à Romano Pontifice damnatæ essent. Ergo signum est, Ecclesiam totam sentire, Pontificem Romanum in ejusmodi rebus errare non posse. Ultimo remittit dictus Cardinalis Lectores, ut videant Prosperum, in ultimo libro contra Collatorem, & Petrum Diaconum, lib. de Incarnatione, & gratia Christi ad Fulgentium.		42. And the Pope has condemned very many other heresies without a General Council, says Cardinal Bellarmine in the place already alleged, which by that very fact the whole Church of Christ held for true heresies and abhorred, because they had been condemned by the Roman Pontiff. It is therefore a sign that the whole Church holds that the Roman Pontiff cannot err in matters of this kind. Lastly the said Cardinal refers his Readers to see Prosper, in ultimo libro contra Collatorem, and Peter the Deacon, lib. de Incarnatione, & gratia Christi ad Fulgentium.
43. Pater Franciscus Amicus, in Cursu Theologico, tom. 4. disput. 7. sect. 1. late etiam fundat, Pontificem etiam extra Concilium Generale, aliquid circa Fidem ex Cathedra definientem, & ut universalem Pastorem, totam Ecclesiam docentem, errare non posse, cum autoritate, nedum Bellarmini dicto libro 4. de Romano Pontifice, tap. 2. sed & D. Thomæ, 2. 2. quæstio 1. art. 10. Bannez, in Commentario brevi, dub ... conclus. 3. Suarez, disput. 5. sect. 8. Valentia, disput. 1. quæstio 1. punct. 7. §. 39. & 40. Malderi, dub. 5. Turriani disputatione 16. dub. 1. Cani, libro 6. de locis Theologicis, cap. 7. & 8. Sylvi, libro 4. de Controvers. quæst. 2. art. 8.		43. Father Francisco Amico, in the Cursus Theologicus, tom. 4. disput. 7. sect. 1., likewise establishes at large that the Pontiff, even outside a General Council, defining something concerning Faith ex Cathedra, and, as universal Pastor, teaching the whole Church, cannot err, with the authority not only of Bellarmine, dicto libro 4. de Romano Pontifice, tap. 2., but also of St. Thomas, 2. 2. quæstio 1. art. 10., Bañez, in Commentario brevi, dub. [?] conclus. 3., Suárez, disput. 5. sect. 8., Valentia, disput. 1. quæstio 1. punct. 7. §. 39. & 40., Malderus, dub. 5., Torres, disputatione 16. dub. 1., Cano, libro 6. de locis Theologicis, cap. 7. & 8., Sylvius, libro 4. de Controvers. quæst. 2. art. 8., and Cajetan, Opusc. de Autoritate Papæ, & Concilii, cap. 9. §. Ad rationem, saying: It has

Latin		English
& Cajetani, Opusc. de Autoritate Papæ, & Concilii, cap. 9. §. Ad rationem, dicentis: Jam dictum est, quod non plus potest Papa, & Ecclesia, quam Papa solus. Tum, ex communi, & constanti sententia. Tum tandem, ex variis rationibus. Ex quibus, unam, & alteram, ex Selectionibus, referre operæ pretium duxi.		already been said that the Pope and the Church can do no more than the Pope alone. Then, from the common and constant opinion. Then finally, from various reasons. Of which I have thought it worth the labor to relate one or two of the more select.
44. Prima, hujusmodi est. Summus Pontifex eam habet in definiendis rebus Fidei auctoritatem, quam ipse D. Petrus primus Pontifex, à Deo institutus. Sed D. Petrus infalibilem auctoritatem in definiendis rebus Fidei dependenter à Concilio Generali non habuit. Ergo nec Summus Pontifex D. Petri successor eam habet dependenter à Concilio Generali. Major constat, quia Petrus infalibilem auctoritatem definiendi res Fidei non habuit ut privata persona, sed ut publicus Pastor, & universalis Ecclesiæ Rector: quippe qui illam à Christo accepit in bonum, & utilitatem Ecclesiæ, adeoque continuandam in suis successoribus. Minor constat ex omnibus iis promissionibus, quas Christus Petro fecit, ut futuro Ecclesiæ Rectori, quæ omnes factæ sunt soli singulari personæ Petri, nulla de Ecclesia facta mentione: Math. 16. Tibi dabo claves Regni Cælorum: quodcumque ligaveris super terram, erit ligatum, & in Cælis: & quodcumque solveris super terram, erit solutum, & in Cælis. Et pariter Lucæ 22. Ego rogavi pro te, ut non deficiat, Fides tua, & tu aliquando confirma fratres tuos. Et etiam, Joannis 21. Pasce oves meas. Cum igitur potestatem confirmandi fratres in Fide, ligandi. & solvendi, ovesque pascendi, Christus in Petro non limitet per dependentiam ab Ecclesia, sed illam conferat absolutam ab omni dependentia, falso illam adversarii limitant per dependentiam à Concilio Generali. Pro qua certe ratione, faciunt auctoritates, quas supra numero 4, recensui, desumptæ ex Card. Cajetano, tom. 1. Opusculorum. tract. 2. cap. 14.		44. The first is of this sort. The Supreme Pontiff has that authority in defining matters of Faith which St. Peter himself, the first Pontiff instituted by God, had. But St. Peter did not have infallible authority in defining matters of Faith dependently upon a General Council. Therefore neither has the Supreme Pontiff, St. Peter's successor, that authority dependently upon a General Council. The major is evident, because Peter had infallible authority of defining matters of Faith not as a private person, but as public Pastor and Ruler of the universal Church: inasmuch as he received it from Christ for the good and utility of the Church, and therefore to be continued in his successors. The minor is evident from all those promises which Christ made to Peter as the future Ruler of the Church, all of which were made to the single individual person of Peter alone, with no mention made of the Church: Matt. 16. To thee will I give the keys of the kingdom of heaven: whatsoever thou shalt bind upon earth, it shall be bound also in heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt loose upon earth, it shall be loosed also in heaven. And likewise Luke 22. I have prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not: and do thou at length confirm thy brethren. And also, John 21. Feed my sheep. Since therefore Christ does not limit in Peter the power of confirming the brethren in Faith, of binding and loosing, and of feeding the sheep, by dependence upon the Church, but confers it absolute and free from all dependence, the adversaries falsely limit it by dependence upon a General Council. For which reason certainly there make the authorities which I recounted above, numero 4, taken from Cardinal Cajetan, tom. 1. Opusculorum. tract. 2. cap. 14.

Latin		English
45. Nec valet hinc inferri Summum Pontificem. non debere in rebus Fidei definiendis, ullos adhibere consultores. Non inquam valet, quia licet dictis in locis, potestas definiendi, absolute, & independenter sit Petro, & successoribus ejus collata, aliunde constat, debere Pontificem adhibere Doctores, qui res examinent, & discutiant ante quam res ad Fidem spectantes definiat, nempe ex modo, quo Christus assistentiam promissit Pontifici, scilicet modo humano se habenti.		45. Nor is it valid to infer from this that the Supreme Pontiff ought not to employ any consultors in defining matters of Faith. It is not valid, I say, because although in the said passages the power of defining is conferred absolutely and independently upon Peter and his successors, it is established from another source that the Pontiff ought to employ Doctors who may examine and discuss the matters before he defines things pertaining to Faith — namely, from the manner in which Christ promised assistance to the Pontiff, that is, in a manner conformable to human ways.
46. Quod si petas, quid si Pontifex vellet nullis consultis res Fidei, aut morum definire, habebit ne infalibilem Dei assistentiam, ne in definitione erret? Respondet Amicus loco citato, n. 3. post Canum, lib. 5. de Locis Theologicis, c. 5. quæst. 3. Spiritum Sanctum nunquam permissurum, ut Pontifex, ad controversias Fidei decidendas accedat inconsultis Doctoribus: quia qui promissit finem, promissit etiam media necessaria ad finem: at Christus promisit Petro, ejusque successoribus, contra ipsius sententiam, nunquam portas inferi prævalituras, & ad veram sententiam Fidei ferendam necessaria est Doctorum prævia consultatio, & veritatis discussio. Alioqui semper Ecclesia dubia esse posset an in controversiis hactenus à Sede Apostolica definitis adhibita sit talis consultationis conditio.		46. But if you ask, what if the Pontiff should wish to define matters of Faith or of morals with none consulted, will he have the infallible assistance of God, that he err not in the definition? Amicus replies, loco citato, n. 3., after Cano, lib. 5. de Locis Theologicis, c. 5. quæst. 3., that the Holy Spirit will never permit the Pontiff to approach the deciding of controversies of Faith with the Doctors unconsulted: because he who promised the end promised also the means necessary to the end; but Christ promised to Peter and to his successors that the gates of hell should never prevail against his judgment, and for pronouncing a true judgment of Faith the previous consultation of Doctors and discussion of the truth is necessary. Otherwise the Church could always be in doubt whether, in the controversies hitherto defined by the Apostolic See, the condition of such consultation was employed.
47. Secunda ratio, pro nostra sententia est: quia quotiescunque in aliqua propositione expresse revelata alia implicite continetur, hæc implicite contenta, pertinet ad eandem fidem, non quidem ut deducta; sed ut explicata. At in hac propositione expresse revelata: Petrus etiam extra Concilium Generale, res Fidei definiens, habet infalibilem auctoritatem à Christo, virtute continetur hæc, non ut deducta, sed ut explicata: Quivis legitimus Petri successor, etiam extra Concilium Generale res Fidei definiens, habet infalibilem auctoritatem. Ergo etiam hæc, non ut deducta, sed ut explicata		47. The second reason for our opinion is this: because as often as in some expressly revealed proposition another is implicitly contained, this implicitly contained one pertains to the same faith, not indeed as deduced, but as explicated. But in this expressly revealed proposition: Peter, even outside a General Council, defining matters of Faith, has infallible authority from Christ, this is virtually contained, not as deduced, but as explicated: Any legitimate successor of Peter whatsoever, even outside a General Council, defining matters of Faith, has infallible authority. Therefore this also, not as deduced but as explicated, will pertain to the same Faith to which the expressly revealed major pertains. The major is expressly had in

Latin		English
pertinebit ad eandem Fidem, ad quam pertinet major expressa revelata. Major expresse habetur in Sacris Oraculis, paulo ante in prima ratione redditis, in quibus omnes promissiones à Christo Petro factæ, ut Pastori universalis Ecclesiæ, factæ sunt singulari personæ, & individua ipsius. Minor evidenter deducitur ex fine, propter quem talem auctoritatem Christus contulit Petro, scilicet ut eam perpetuaret in Ecclesia, juxta illud: Tu es Petrus, & super hanc petram ædificabo Ecclesiam meam, & porta inferi non prævalebunt adversus eam. Quam rationem refert, & sequitur Diana, dicto tractatu 5. resolutione 4. numero 3.		the Sacred Oracles rendered a little before in the first reason, in which all the promises made by Christ to Peter, as Pastor of the universal Church, were made to his singular and individual person. The minor is evidently deduced from the end for which Christ conferred such authority upon Peter, namely that he might perpetuate it in the Church, according to that: Thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my Church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it. Which reason Diana relates and follows, dicto tractatu 5. resolutione 4. numero 3.
48. Quæ certe evidens deductio, ex eo apparet, quia si quilibet Petri legitimus successor, non haberet etiam extra Concilium Generale infalibilem auctoritatem, defuncto Petro, remansisset Ecclesia exposita manifesto periculo, ut portæ inferi adversus eam prævalerent, contra dictam Christi Domini promissionem, eo maxime tempore, quo celebrata non fuerunt Generalia, quod dubio procul contigit per plurimorum curricula sæculorum. Postquam enim D. Petrus Apostolorum celebravit Concilium, anno ipsius septimo, & Christi Domini quinquagesimo primo, cum Apostolis, quod habetur apud Bartholomæum Carranza in Summa omnium Conciliorum à D. Petro, usq; ad Pium Quartum, 85. Canonibus constans, receptis, & approbatis à Sexta Synodo universali, & tertia Constantinopolitana, Canone 2. coacta anno Domini 680. sub nostro S. Agathone Papa, ex Monacho Siculo, ad Petri Cathedram assumpto. Primum Concilium Generale ab Ecclesia celebratum fuit an. Christi 325. sub Sylvestro Papa, anno ejus 12. in Nicæa civitate Bithyniæ, uti Spondanus, in Compendio, n. 1. vel uti Coriolanus, in Compendio Conciliorum vult, an. 327. incæptum, & 330. & Sylvestri 15. terminatum. Secundum, fuit celebratum Constantinopoli sub S. Damaso Papa,		48. Which evident deduction certainly appears from this, that if any legitimate successor of Peter whatsoever did not have infallible authority even outside a General Council, then, Peter being dead, the Church would have remained exposed to the manifest danger that the gates of hell should prevail against her contrary to the aforesaid promise of Christ the Lord, and this most of all in that time in which General Councils were not celebrated, which beyond doubt came to pass through the courses of very many centuries. For after St. Peter celebrated the Council of the Apostles, in the seventh year of his own [pontificate], and the fifty-first of Christ the Lord, together with the Apostles — which is had in Bartholomew Carranza in the Summa of all the Councils from St. Peter down to Pius the Fourth, consisting of 85 Canons, received and approved by the Sixth universal Synod and third of Constantinople, Canon 2, assembled in the year of the Lord 680, under our St. Agatho, Pope, from a Sicilian Monk assumed to the Chair of Peter. The First General Council celebrated by the Church was in the year of Christ 325, under Pope Sylvester, in his 12th year, in Nicæa, a city of Bithynia, as Spondanus, in Compendio, n. 1.; or, as Coriolanus, in Compendio Conciliorum, will have it, begun in the year 327, and terminated in 330, the 15th of Sylvester. The Second was celebrated at Constantinople under St. Damasus, Pope, in his 15th year, and of Christ the Lord 381, as Spondanus testifies, n. 2., and Facciottus, in

Latin		English
an. ejus 15. & Christi Domini, 381. teste Spondano, n. 2. & Faccioto, in Indice Summorum Pontificum ac Coriolano. Granado 2. 2. de Fide, tr. 8. disp. 1. sect. 1. n. 3. Tertium coactum fuit Epesi, an. Cælestini Papæ octavo, & Christi, 431. uti ipsi testantur Authores: Quartum fuit Chalcedonense, sub Leone Magno Papa celebratum anno ipsius 12. & Christi, 451. de quo idem Spondanus, & Facciotus: ac Coriolanus. Quintum Concilium, & secundum Constantinopolitanum, coactum fuit anno Domini 553. & 14. nostri Vigilii Papæ Primi licet minus bene Coriolanus dicat coactum Agathonis tempore, in dicto anno. Sextum Concilium Generale, & tertium Constantinopolitanum, ut prædicti firmant Authores, celebratum est sub præfato S. Agathone Pontifice, Monacho Benedictino, an. 680. Septimum Concilium Generale, quod fuit secundum Nicænum fuit celebratum sub Adriano Papa I. an. 789. juxta Facciotum, vel juxta Spondanum & Coriolanum, anno 787. Octavum autem, quod fuit Constantinopolitanum quartum, fuit juxta utrumque Authorem, anno Domini 869. & 2. Adriani II. Nonum vero Generale Concilium, & quintum Constantinopolitanum fuisse coactum sub Joanne Papa Octavo, anno 877. testatur Facciotus, quod Coriolanus recensere omittit. Noster Calixtus Papa II. Generale Concilium Lateranense I. celebravit Romæ, anno Domini 1122. vel ut mavult Facciotus anno 1123. Innocentius Secundus, etiam noster, cum mille Episcopis aliud Lateranense II. celebravit Generale Concilium, an. 1139. secundum Facciotum, & secundum Coriolanum, an. 1135. Spondanus, Faccioto consentit anno 1139. Alexander III. aliud Lateranense Concilium Generale an. 1180. celebravit, teste dicto Faccioto, vel ut ait Coriolanus, anno præcedenti, 1179. Quod fuit tertium Lateranense, & duodecimum Generale. Tertium decimum Generale, & quartum Lateranense, celebratum fuit sub Innocentio Tertio, an. 1215. ut testantur		Indice Summorum Pontificum, and Coriolanus. Granado 2. 2. de Fide, tr. 8. disp. 1. sect. 1. n. 3. The Third was assembled at Ephesus, in the eighth year of Pope Celestine, and of Christ 431, as the same Authors testify. The Fourth was that of Chalcedon, celebrated under Leo the Great, Pope, in his 12th year, and of Christ 451; concerning which the same Spondanus, and Facciotus, and Coriolanus. The Fifth Council, and second of Constantinople, was assembled in the year of the Lord 553, and the 14th of our Vigilii, Pope the First, although Coriolanus less rightly says it was assembled in the time of Agatho, in the said year. The Sixth General Council, and third of Constantinople, as the aforesaid Authors affirm, was celebrated under the aforesaid St. Agatho, Pontiff, a Benedictine Monk, in the year 680. The Seventh General Council, which was the second of Nicæa, was celebrated under Pope Adrian I, in the year 789, according to Facciotus, or, according to Spondanus and Coriolanus, in the year 787. But the Eighth, which was the fourth of Constantinople, was, according to both Authors, in the year of the Lord 869, and the 2nd of Adrian II. That the Ninth General Council, moreover, and fifth of Constantinople, was assembled under Pope John the Eighth, in the year 877, Facciotus testifies, which Coriolanus omits to recount. Our Pope Calixtus II celebrated the First Lateran General Council at Rome, in the year of the Lord 1122, or, as Facciotus prefers, in the year 1123. Innocent the Second, also ours, with a thousand Bishops celebrated another General Council, the Second Lateran, in the year 1139 according to Facciotus, and according to Coriolanus in the year 1135; Spondanus agrees with Facciotus on the year 1139. Alexander III celebrated another Lateran General Council in the year 1180, as the said Facciotus testifies, or, as Coriolanus says, in the preceding year, 1179: which was the third Lateran, and the twelfth General. The thirteenth General, and fourth Lateran, was celebrated under Innocent the Third, in the year 1215, as Coriolanus, Facciotus, and Spondanus testify, in the Continuation of the Annals of Baronius, tom. 1. eodem an. 1215. The fourteenth was the First of Lyons, celebrated under Innocent the Fourth, in the year 1245, as Spondanus, Coriolanus, and Facciotus. The

Latin		English
Coriolanus, Facciotus, & Spondanus, in Continuatione Annalium Baronii, tom. 1. eodem an. 1215. Quantum decimum fuit Lugdunense I. celebratum sub Innocentio Quarto, an. 1245. uti Spondanus, Coriolanus, & Facciotus. Quintum decimum, & II. Lugdunense, coactum fuit sub Gregorio X. an. 1274. testibus Coriolano, & Spondano, vel uti Facciotus, anno sequenti 1275. Decimum sextum fuit Viennense, sub Martino V. an. 1311. Coriolanus, & Spondanus, pro eo stant, Facciotus vero pro anno sequenti 1312. Decimum septimum fuit Florentinum, sub Eugenio Quarto celebratum an. 1438. & 1439. Coriolanus, Spondanus, & Facciotus. Decimum Octavum, & Quintum Lateranense, celebratum fuit sub Julio II. & Leone X. an. 1517. Coriolanus, & Spondanus illud terminant, & 5. Leonis; Facciotus pro illo assignat an. 1511. qui fuit 8. Julii. Ultimum Concilium Generale fuit Tridentinum, inchoatum sub Paulo III. & continuatum sub Julio III. & terminatum sub Pio IV. an. 1563. Coactum fuit an. 1545. uti Coriolanus, & Spondanus. Facciotus pro hoc Concilio assignat annum 1542. in quo certe prodiiit Bulla Pauli præfati pro indictione Concilii hujus.		fifteenth, and Second of Lyons, was assembled under Gregory X, in the year 1274, on the testimony of Coriolanus and Spondanus, or, as Facciotus, in the following year 1275. The sixteenth was that of Vienne, under Martin V, in the year 1311: Coriolanus and Spondanus stand for it, but Facciotus for the following year 1312. The seventeenth was that of Florence, celebrated under Eugene the Fourth in the years 1438 and 1439: Coriolanus, Spondanus, and Facciotus. The eighteenth, and Fifth Lateran, was celebrated under Julius II and Leo X, in the year 1517: Coriolanus and Spondanus terminate it there, and in the 5th of Leo; Facciotus assigns for it the year 1511, which was the 8th of Julius. The last General Council was that of Trent, begun under Paul III, and continued under Julius III, and terminated under Pius IV, in the year 1563. It was assembled in the year 1545, as Coriolanus and Spondanus. Facciotus assigns for this Council the year 1542, in which indeed the Bull of the aforesaid Paul went forth for the indiction of this Council.
49. Alia septem Concilia Generalia recenset Coriolanus in principio summæ, quæ quia reprobata, præcedentibus adiungi non merentur. Primum fuit Antiochenum, an. 345. in quo S. Athanasius damnatus est. Secundum Mediolanense, an. 354. in quo, licet oblique, fides Catholica fuit damnata. Tertium Ariminense, an. 363. Quartum Ephesinum II. an. 459. in quo hæresis Eutychiana fuit confirmata. Quintum Constantinopolitanum contra sacras Images, an. 728. Sextum Constantinopolitanum, an. 754. in quo definitum est, abolendas esse Christi, & Sanctorum images. Hoc Concilium reprobatur in Septimo, & secundo Niseno, actione 6. an. 787. Septimum est Pisanum, an. 1511. quod reprobatur est		49. Coriolanus recounts seven other General Councils at the beginning of his summa, which, because they are reprobated, do not deserve to be joined to the preceding. The First was that of Antioch, in the year 345, in which St. Athanasius was condemned. The Second, that of Milan, in the year 354, in which, although obliquely, the Catholic faith was condemned. The Third, that of Rimini, in the year 363. The Fourth, the Second of Ephesus, in the year 459, in which the Eutychian heresy was confirmed. The Fifth, that of Constantinople against the sacred Images, in the year 728. The Sixth, that of Constantinople, in the year 754, in which it was defined that the images of Christ and of the Saints were to be abolished. This Council was reprobated in the Seventh, and second of Nicæa, action 6, in the year 787. The Seventh is that of Pisa, in the

Latin		English
in Concilio Lateranensi 5. sub Julio II. II. sess. 2. & 3. 50. Sex alia Concilia partim approbata, & partim reprobata refert Coriolanus. Primum est Sardicense, anno Domini 347. in quo 76. Episcopi Orientales fidem scripserunt Arianam, & 300. Occidentales Catholicam confirmarunt fidem, quam exposuit Hilarius, in libro de Synodis. Secundum est Syrmienne, anno 356. in quo duæ formulæ fidei inter se dissentientes editæ sunt. Tertium est Quinisextum, ann. 692. in quo continentur Canones Trullani reprobati à Sergio Papa tunc regnante, quia sine Pontificis autoritate id fecerunt, Canon tamen 82. de Pingendis Imaginibus, postea receptus est à 7. Synodo, & ab Adriano Papa I. Quartum est Francofordiense, anno 794. ab Adriano I. approbatum, quatenus definit Christum non esse filium Dei adoptivum, & reprobatur ab eodem quantum ad partem in qua ex errore damnatur Septima Synodus. Quintum est Concilium Constantiense, quod in quantum definivit Concilium esse supra Papam, reprobatur in Florentino, & in ultimo Lateranensi. Quantum ad ea, quæ Martinus V. probavit, ab omnibus recipitur Catholicis. Sextum est Basilense, cujus nihil est ratum, & probatum, nisi quædam dispositiones circa beneficia à Concilio factæ, & à Nicolao Papa, pacis, & unitatis gratia approbatæ; Concilium vero ipsum reprobatur à Concilio vero ipsum reprobatur à Concilio Lateranensi ultimo, sess. 2.		year 1511, which was reprobated in the Fifth Lateran Council under Julius II, sess. 2. & 3. 50. Coriolanus reports six other Councils, partly approved and partly reprobated. The First is that of Sardica, in the year of the Lord 347, in which 76 Eastern Bishops wrote out the Arian faith, and 300 Western confirmed the Catholic faith, which Hilary set forth, in libro de Synodis. The Second is that of Sirmium, in the year 356, in which two formulas of faith dissenting from one another were published. The Third is the Quinisext, in the year 692, in which are contained the Trullan Canons, reprobated by Pope Sergius then reigning, because they did this without the authority of the Pontiff; the 82nd Canon, however, on the Painting of Images, was afterwards received by the 7th Synod, and by Pope Adrian I. The Fourth is that of Frankfurt, in the year 794, approved by Adrian I inasmuch as it defines that Christ is not the adoptive son of God, and reprobated by the same as to the part in which, by an error, the Seventh Synod is condemned. The Fifth is the Council of Constance, which, inasmuch as it defined the Council to be above the Pope, is reprobated in that of Florence, and in the last Lateran. As to those things which Martin V approved, it is received by all Catholics. The Sixth is that of Basel, of which nothing is ratified and approved, save certain dispositions concerning benefices made by the Council, and approved by Pope Nicholas for the sake of peace and unity; but the Council itself is reprobated by [?] the last Lateran Council, sess. 2.
51. Concilium Pisanum anno 1409. celebratum, nec est manifeste approbatum, nec reprobatur: nam ex una parte depositis Gregorio XII. & Benedicto XIII, Alexandrum V. elegit, qui inter veros annumeratur Pontifices: ex altera vero S. Antonin. part. 3. tit. 22. c. 5. §. 2. & 3. asserit esse Conciliabulum: quod eventus probavit: coactum enim fuit ad Schisma		51. The Council of Pisa, celebrated in the year 1409, is neither manifestly approved nor reprobated: for on the one side, Gregory XII and Benedict XIII being deposed, it elected Alexander V, who is numbered among the true Pontiffs; but on the other, St. Antoninus, part. 3. tit. 22. c. 5. §. 2. & 3., asserts it to be a Conciliabulum: which the event proved; for it was assembled to take away the Schism, which nevertheless it did not take away, but increased.

Latin		English
tollendum, quod tamen non sustulit, sed auxit.
52. Duodecimo suppono Summum Pontificem, errare minime posse, quae talem doctrinam morum universis fidelibus tradendo, aut prohibendo, sive procedat cum Concilio Generali, sive, non. Ita Diana Coordin. tom. 9. tr. 5. res. 12. à n. 4. Bellarmine, tom. 1. l. 4. de Potest. spirituali Summi Pontific. c. 5. de Decretis morum. Turrianus, in Selectis Disputat. Censurae Theologicae, centur. 1. dub. 63. Allegat Diana Canum, l. 5. de Locis Theologic. c. 5. q. ult. concl. 1. Bannez, 2. 2. q. 1. art. 1. in Breviorib. comment. dub. 6. Valentiam, de Objecto fidei, disp. 1. q. 1. pun. 7. §. 40. Malderum, dub. 6. Suarez, disp. 5. sect. 8. Sylvium, l. 4. de Controv. q. 2. art. 13. Turrianum, disp. 16. dub. 2. & recentiores omnes, de quorum numero est Jacob. Granado contr. 1. de Fide, tract. 7. disp. 2. sect. 2. n. 6. & 11. ibi enim, hanc statuit conclusionem: Dum Summus Pontifex, ut caput Ecclesiae, definit aliquid omnino pertinens ad fidem, aut mores, non potest errare: hic autem, sequentia profert: Quod attinet ad morum doctrinam, non minus certum est, non posse definiri à Pontifice esse bonum id, quod peccatum est, quam est certum non posse errare in doctrina fidei, cum etiam ad fidem pertinere possit credere, an hoc sit peccatum, vel non: unde non potest definire usuram non esse peccatum, &c. Hæc Pater Granado.		52. Twelfthly, I suppose that the Supreme Pontiff can by no means err, as such, in handing on or in prohibiting a doctrine of morals to all the faithful, whether he proceed with a General Council, or not. So Diana Coordin. tom. 9. tr. 5. res. 12. à n. 4.; Bellarmine, tom. 1. l. 4. de Potest. spirituali Summi Pontific. c. 5. de Decretis morum.; Turrianus, in Selectis Disputat. Censurae Theologicae, centur. 1. dub. 63. Diana alleges Cano, l. 5. de Locis Theologic. c. 5. q. ult. concl. 1.; Bañes, 2. 2. q. 1. art. 1. in Breviorib. comment. dub. 6.; Valentia, de Objecto fidei, disp. 1. q. 1. pun. 7. §. 40.; Malderus, dub. 6.; Suarez, disp. 5. sect. 8.; Sylvius, l. 4. de Controv. q. 2. art. 13.; Turrianus, disp. 16. dub. 2.; and all the more recent writers, of whose number is James Granado, contr. 1. de Fide, tract. 7. disp. 2. sect. 2. n. 6. & 11.: for there he lays down this conclusion: While the Supreme Pontiff, as head of the Church, defines something wholly pertaining to faith or to morals, he cannot err. And here he brings forth what follows: As concerns the doctrine of morals, it is no less certain that that which is a sin cannot be defined by the Pontiff to be good, than it is certain that he cannot err in the doctrine of faith, since it can also pertain to faith to believe whether this be a sin or not: whence he cannot define that usury is not a sin, etc. Thus Father Granado.
53. Diana autem, dicto n. 4. istam firmat assertionem: Dicendum est, de fide esse, non posse Pontificem statuere aliquid ab universali Ecclesia observandum, quod legi divinæ, vel naturali contrarium sit.		53. But Diana, dicto n. 4., affirms this assertion: It must be said that it is of faith that the Pontiff cannot establish anything to be observed by the universal Church which is contrary to the divine or to the natural law.
54. Illam probat I. quia de fide est Pontificem errare non posse in pascendis ovibus; sed oves non solum pascuntur doctrina fidei, sed morum institutis. Ergo de fide est, in his institutis errare non posse, sicut errare non potest in doctrina fidei.		54. He proves it I. because it is of faith that the Pontiff cannot err in feeding the sheep; but the sheep are fed not only by the doctrine of faith, but by the institutes of morals. Therefore it is of faith that he cannot err in these institutes, just as he cannot err in the doctrine of faith.

Latin		English
55. II. De fide est, in Ecclesia deficere non posse spiritum veritatis; sed si Pontifex observandum præciperet legi divinæ, aut naturali contrarium, jam deficeret in Ecclesia spiritus veritatis. Ergo non posse illud præcipere de fide est.		55. II. It is of faith that the spirit of truth cannot fail in the Church; but if the Pontiff should command something contrary to the divine or natural law to be observed, the spirit of truth would already fail in the Church. Therefore that he cannot command this is of faith.
56. III. De fide est, Pontificem in rebus fidei non posse errorem docere; sed ex eo, quod præciperet aliquid observandum legi divinæ, aut naturali contrarium, errorem doceret, quia doceret credere, hoc esse observandum, quod est error in fide. Ergo de fide est illud non posse præcipere.		56. III. It is of faith that the Pontiff cannot teach error in matters of faith; but from the fact that he should command something to be observed contrary to the divine or natural law, he would teach error, because he would teach men to believe that this is to be observed, which is an error in faith. Therefore it is of faith that he cannot command that.
57. Quarto probat ab inconvenienti; quia si posset Pontifex in ferendis legibus de rebus ad salutem necessariis errare, sequeretur, quod tota Ecclesia errare posset in negotio salutis; sed in salutis negotio tota Ecclesia errare non potest. Ergo nec potest Pontifex errare in ferendis legibus de rebus ad salutem necessariis. Minor patet ex Christi promissione: & portæ inferi non prævalebunt adversus eam : quia errare si posset, sive falsitate doctrinæ, sive malitia, & morum iniquitate, vere contra eam prævalere possent Inferorum portæ.		57. Fourthly he proves it from an inconvenience: because if the Pontiff could err in enacting laws about things necessary to salvation, it would follow that the whole Church could err in the business of salvation; but in the business of salvation the whole Church cannot err. Therefore neither can the Pontiff err in enacting laws about things necessary to salvation. The minor is plain from the promise of Christ: and the gates of hell shall not prevail against her : because, if she could err, whether by falsity of doctrine, or by malice and iniquity of morals, the gates of Hell could truly prevail against her.
58. Sequela probatur: quia ex Christi præcepto tota tenetur Ecclesia Summo obedire Pontifici præcipienti, vel prohibenti necessaria ad salutem. Ergo si posset Summus Pontifex errare in hujusmodi præceptis, & prohibitionibus, posset errare tota Ecclesia in necessariis ad salutem.		58. The consequence is proved: because by the precept of Christ the whole Church is bound to obey the Supreme Pontiff commanding or prohibiting things necessary to salvation. Therefore, if the Supreme Pontiff could err in precepts and prohibitions of this kind, the whole Church could err in things necessary to salvation.
59. Et confirmatur. Si posset Pontifex Summus errare in præcipiendis rebus ad salutem necessariis, posset etiam errare in rebus fidei; quia eadem Sacra scriptura docet, vitia esse turpia, & vitanda; è contra vero virtutes, honestas esse, & amplectendas: Si autem Summus Pontifex, aut vitium aliquod præciperet, aut virtutem prohiberet, contra ipsam sacram doceret Scripturam, vitium esse honestum, & amplectendum; & è contra, virtutem turpem esse, & vitandam, cum non possit vitium præcipere, nisi sub		59. And it is confirmed. If the Supreme Pontiff could err in commanding things necessary to salvation, he could also err in matters of faith; because the same Sacred Scripture teaches that vices are base and to be shunned, and, on the contrary, that virtues are honest and to be embraced. But if the Supreme Pontiff should either command some vice, or prohibit a virtue, he would teach against that same sacred Scripture that vice is honest and to be embraced, and, on the contrary, that virtue is base and to be shunned; since he cannot command a vice save under the aspect of the ratione boni, & honesti; nec virtutem prohibere, nisi sub ratione mali, & turpis. Ergo si Papa errare posset in præcipiendis rebus ad salutem necessariis, errare etiam posset in rebus ad fidem spectantibus.		good and the honest, nor prohibit a virtue save under the aspect of the evil and the base. Therefore, if the Pope could err in commanding things necessary to salvation, he could also err in things pertaining to the faith.

Latin		English
60. Suppositum nostrum probat Bellarminus, loco citato , dicendo. Non solum in Decretis fidei errare non potest Summus Pontifex, sed neque in præceptis morum, quæ toti Ecclesiæ præscribuntur, & quæ in rebus necessariis ad salutem, vel in iis, quæ per se bona, vel mala sunt versantur.		60. Bellarmine proves our supposition, loco citato , saying: Not only in the Decrees of faith can the Supreme Pontiff not err, but neither in the precepts of morals which are prescribed to the whole Church, and which are concerned with things necessary to salvation, or with those things which are per se good or evil.
61. Dicimus primum , non posse errare Pontificem in his præceptis, quæ toti Ecclesiæ præscribuntur, quia ut supra diximus, in præceptis, & judiciis particularibus, non est absurdum Pontificem errare. Addidimus secundo , quæ in rebus necessariis ad salutem, vel per se bonis, aut malis versantur, quia non est erroneum dicere Pontificem, in aliis legibus posse errare, nimirum superfluum legem condendo, vel minus discretam, &c.		61. We say first , that the Pontiff cannot err in those precepts which are prescribed to the whole Church, because, as we said above, in particular precepts and judgments it is not absurd that the Pontiff should err. We added secondly , which are concerned with things necessary to salvation, or per se good or evil, because it is not erroneous to say that the Pontiff can err in other laws, namely by enacting a superfluous law, or a less discreet one, etc.
62. Ac ut rem totam exemplis declaremus; Non potest fieri, ut Pontifex erret, præcipiendo aliquod vitium, ut usuram, vel prohibendo virtutem, ut restitutionem; quia hæc sunt per se bona, vel mala. Nec potest fieri, ut erret præcipiendo aliquid contra salutem, ut circumcisionem, vel Sabbathum: vel prohibendo aliquid necessarium ad salutem, ut Baptismum, aut Eucharistiam, licet hæc non sint per se bona, vel mala: ut autem jubeat aliquid, quod non sit bonum, neq; malum ex se, neq; contra salutem, sed tamen est inutile, vel sub pœna nimis gravi illud præcipiat, non est absurdum dicere posse fieri, quanquam non est subditorum, de hac re dubitare, sed simpliciter obedire.		62. And that we may declare the whole matter by examples: It cannot come about that the Pontiff should err by commanding some vice, as usury, or by prohibiting a virtue, as restitution; because these are per se good or evil. Nor can it come about that he should err by commanding something against salvation, as circumcision, or the Sabbath; or by prohibiting something necessary to salvation, as Baptism, or the Eucharist, although these are not per se good or evil. But that he should enjoin something which is neither good nor evil of itself, nor against salvation, but is nevertheless useless, or should command it under too grave a penalty, it is not absurd to say that this can come about; although it is not for subjects to doubt about this matter, but simply to obey.
63. Probatur jam propositio, & primo , quod non possit Papa errare in præceptis morum ad salutem necessariorum; quia tunc tota Ecclesia graviter læderetur, & erraret in rebus necessariis: quod est contra promissionem Domini, Joann. 16 .		63. The proposition is now proved, and first , that the Pope cannot err in the precepts of morals necessary to salvation; because then the whole Church would be gravely injured, and would err in things necessary: which is against the promise of the Lord, Joann. 16 . When that

Latin		English
Cum venerit ille Spiritus veritatis, docebit vos omnem veritatem. Quod intelligitur (ut minimum) de veritate necessaria ad salutem.		Spirit of truth shall come, he will teach you all truth. Which is understood (at the least) of the truth necessary to salvation.
64. Secundo , quia Deus tunc deesset Ecclesiæ in necessariis, quandoquidem præcipit illi, ut sequatur Pontificem, & Pontificem permittit errare in necessariis. At certe, si Deus nulli rei deest in necessariis, quanto minus Ecclesiæ suæ?		64. Secondly , because God would then be wanting to the Church in things necessary, since he commands her to follow the Pontiff, and permits the Pontiff to err in things necessary. But surely, if God is wanting to no thing in what is necessary, how much less to his own Church?
65. Quod autem non possit Pontifex errare in moribus per se bonis, vel malis, probatur. Nam tunc Ecclesia, non posset vere dici sancta, ut in Symbola Apostolorum vocatur. Nam sancta dicitur potissimum ob sanctam professionem, ut alibi ostendimus, quia nimirum legem, & professionem sanctam profitetur, quæ nihil docet falsum, nihil præcipit malum.		65. But that the Pontiff cannot err in morals per se good or evil is proved. For then the Church could not truly be called holy, as she is called in the Symbol of the Apostles. For she is called holy chiefly on account of her holy profession, as we have shown elsewhere, because, namely, she professes a holy law and profession, which teaches nothing false, commands nothing evil.
66. Secundo , quia tunc necessario erraret etiam circa fidem. Nam fides Catholica docet, omnem virtutem esse bonam, omne vitium esse malum: si autem Papa erraret præcipiendo vitia, vel prohibendo virtutes; teneretur Ecclesia credere vitia esse bona, & virtutes malas, nisi vellet contra conscientiam peccare. Hactenus Cardinalis Bellarminus.		66. Secondly , because then she would necessarily err also concerning the faith. For the Catholic faith teaches that every virtue is good, every vice evil: but if the Pope should err by commanding vices, or by prohibiting virtues, the Church would be bound to believe that vices are good and virtues evil, unless she were willing to sin against conscience. Thus far Cardinal Bellarmine.
67. Pater Franciscus Suarez, tract. de Fide, disp. 5. sect. 8. n. 7. postquam n. 4. affirmaverat, Pontificem definientem ex Cathedra, esse regulam fidei, quæ errare non potest, quando aliquid authentice proponit universæ Ecclesiæ, tanquam de fide divina credendum, sic ait: Ex hac generali assertionem sequitur primo , Pontificem non posse errare in præceptis, seu rebus moralibus, quas tradit, vel approbat pro universa Ecclesia. Hoc intelligendum, quantum ad substantiam, seu quantum ad honestatem morum: nam quoad circumstantias, vel multiplicandi præcepta, vel rigorem, aut nimias pœnas, non est inconveniens, aliquando committere aliquem humanum defectum quia hoc non est contra Ecclesiæ sanctitatem: approbare autem turpia pro		67. Father Francis Suarez, tract. de Fide, disp. 5. sect. 8. n. 7. , after he had affirmed, n. 4. , that the Pontiff defining ex Cathedra is a rule of faith which cannot err, when he authentically proposes something to the universal Church as to be believed with divine faith, speaks thus: From this general assertion it follows first , that the Pontiff cannot err in the precepts, or moral matters, which he hands on or approves for the universal Church. This is to be understood as to the substance, or as to the honesty of morals: for as to the circumstances, whether of multiplying precepts, or of rigor, or of excessive penalties, it is not inconvenient that some human defect be sometimes committed, because this is not against the sanctity of the Church; but to approve base things as honest, or conversely to condemn honest things as iniquitous, is repugnant to the truth and sanctity of the Church: and therefore in these also the

Latin		English
honestis, vel è converso damnare honesta tanquam iniqua, repugnat veritati, & sanctitati Ecclesiæ: Et ideo in his etiam non potest errare Pontifex. Quod dixit esse de fide Antoninus, 3. part. tit. 12. c. 8. §. 2. Cano vero, l. 5. de Locis, c. 5. dixit parum distare. Alii vero recentiores, paulo minus rem hanc exaggerant: Molina, de Justitia, disp. 325. Bellarminus, l. 4. de Romano Pontifice, c. 5. Declaratur exemplo. Nam Ecclesia approbavit communionem laicorum, sub una specie, tanquam sufficientem ad salutem; & ideo hoc habetur tanquam certum de fide, juxta Concilium Tridentinum, sess. 22. c. 1. sed in hac, & simili materia, ut Ecclesia id teneat, sufficit approbatio Pontificis, immo illam tenetur Ecclesia sequi: Ergo ut Ecclesia non erret, necesse est ut Pontifex in tali materia, errare non possit. Et ita sentit etiam Innocentius Tertius, in capite, Per venerabilem, Qui filii sint legitimi. Denique, omnia adducta in assertionem, hoc corollarium confirmant; præsertim, quia ut supra dicebam, Decreta morum includunt doctrinam moralem, non minus necessariam ad salutem, quàm sint aliæ veritates fidei.		Pontiff cannot err. Which Antoninus said to be of faith, 3. part. tit. 12. c. 8. §. 2.; but Cano, l. 5. de Locis, c. 5., said that it is little removed from it. Other more recent writers, however, press this matter somewhat less: Molina, de Justitia, disp. 325.; Bellarmine, l. 4. de Romano Pontifice, c. 5. It is declared by an example. For the Church approved the communion of the laity under one species as sufficient for salvation; and therefore this is held as certain of faith, according to the Council of Trent, sess. 22. c. 1.: but in this and like matter, in order that the Church may hold it, the approbation of the Pontiff suffices, nay rather the Church is bound to follow it: therefore, that the Church may not err, it is necessary that the Pontiff cannot err in such matter. And so thinks also Innocent the Third, in capite, Per venerabilem, Qui filii sint legitimi. Finally, all the things adduced in the assertion confirm this corollary; especially because, as I was saying above, the Decrees of morals include a moral doctrine no less necessary to salvation than are the other truths of faith.
68. Hucusq; Suarez, qui n. 2. infert secundo, cum D. Thoma, quod lib. 9. art. ult. D. Antonino, & Cano, locis citatis, Bellarmino, l. 1. c. 5. de Sanctorum beatitudine, Azorio, tom. 2. l. 5. c. 6. q. 5. Valentia, to. 3. disp. 1. q. 1. pun. 7. vers. Itaq. quod ad, Sylvestro, verbo Canonizatio, q. 3. referente Joannem de Neapoli absolute contrarium de hæresi damnantem, turrecremata, l. 2. Summæ, cap. 110. (quibus addo Jacobum Granado, tr. de Fide, disp. 2. tr. 1. & tr. 7. disp. 2. sect. 3. n. 2. contro. 1. pag. mihi 104. Dianam Coordinat. tom. 9. tr. 5. resolut. 15. & Rodericum Arriaga, tom. 5. tract. de fide, disp. 9. de Regulis Fidei, sect. 4. Barbosam, in c. Audivimus, n. 4. d. 1. de Reliquiis & venerat. Sanct. cum pluribus, quos recenset) errare non posse Summum Pontificem, in Sanctorum		68. Thus far Suarez, who, n. 2., infers secondly, with St. Thomas, quod lib. 9. art. ult., St. Antoninus, and Cano, locis citatis, Bellarmine, l. 1. c. 5. de Sanctorum beatitudine, Azor, tom. 2. l. 5. c. 6. q. 5., Valentia, to. 3. disp. 1. q. 1. pun. 7. vers. Itaq. quod ad, Sylvester, verbo Canonizatio, q. 3., who reports John of Naples as absolutely condemning the contrary as heresy, Turrecremata, l. 2. Summæ, cap. 110. (to whom I add James Granado, tr. de Fide, disp. 2. tr. 1. & tr. 7. disp. 2. sect. 3. n. 2. contro. 1. pag. mihi 104., Diana Coordinat. tom. 9. tr. 5. resolut. 15., and Roderick Arriaga, tom. 5. tract. de fide, disp. 9. de Regulis Fidei, sect. 4., Barbosa, in c. Audivimus, n. 4. d. 1. de Reliquiis & venerat. Sanct., with several others whom he recounts), that the Supreme Pontiff cannot err in the Canonization of the Saints. And it is taken (says Suarez) from Gregory, in

Latin		English
Canonizatione. Et sumitur (ait Suarez) ex Gregorio, in c. Sicut, dist. 5. & Bern. ep. 174. ad Lugdunensis.		c. Sicut, dist. 5., and Bernard, ep. 174., to the Lyonese.
69. Ratio vero est (prosequitur Suarez:) quia hæc est pars quædam materiæ moralis, & valde necessaria, ut Ecclesia non erret in cultu, & adoratione Religionis; alias contingere posset, ut coleret hominem damnatum, & ad illum preces funderet; quod est etiam contra puritatem, & sanctitatem Ecclesiæ. Item, non licet fidelibus dubitare de gloria Sancti Canonizati: id enim sub præcisa obligatione præcipiunt Pontifices in ipsa canonizatione: Ergo oportet, ut illi præcepto non possit subesse error, alias deficeret Deus in re maxime necessaria Ecclesiæ, quod est contra providentiam, & promissiones ejus: & ideo, quamvis hæc illatio non sit de fide, censeo esse satis certam, & contrariam esse impiam, ac temerariam. Hæc Suarez dicto n. 8. qui n. 9. in sequentia prorumpit.		69. But the reason is (Suarez pursues): because this is a certain part of moral matter, and very necessary, that the Church may not err in the cult and adoration of Religion; otherwise it could happen that she should worship a damned man, and pour forth prayers to him; which is also against the purity and sanctity of the Church. Likewise, it is not lawful for the faithful to doubt of the glory of a Canonized Saint: for the Pontiffs command this under a precise obligation in the canonization itself: therefore it behooves that error cannot underlie that precept; otherwise God would be wanting in a matter most necessary to the Church, which is against his providence and his promises: and therefore, although this inference is not of faith, I judge it to be sufficiently certain, and the contrary to be impious and rash. Thus Suarez dicto n. 8., who, n. 9., breaks forth into what follows.
70. Tertio infero, non posse Pontificem errare in approbatione Religionis. Ita tradimus etiam, ac latius, tom. 3. de Religione, lib. 2. cap. 17. & amplectuntur recentiores communiter. Azor. tom. 2. lib. 5. cap. 7. quæst. 2. Valentia supra, & quos dicto loco citamus; (addo ego Dianam Coordin. to. 9. tr. 5. resol. 23. n. 6. cum Jo. à S. Th. 2. 2. disp. 9. art. 3. fol. 777. col. 1. Turrianum, in Selectis disp. in censura Theologica, cent. 1. dub. 62. & 65. Granadum, controv. 1. de Fide, tract. 7. disp. 5. cum Bannez, oppositum hæreticum appellante) quod intelligendum est (prosequitur Suarez) quoad substantiam ejus, quidquid sit de circumstantiis, ut esse possunt, vel in approbatione Religionis non necessariæ, vel in nimia multitudine earum, quamvis etiam in his, non sit temere ferendum judicium. (Quam explicationem, seu modificationem conclusionis, etiam addit Diana, n. 8. alia adducens exempla videlicet, si illa nova Religio sit minus Ecclesiæ conveniens, vel quia ejus institutum nimis durum sit, aut laxum		70. Thirdly I infer that the Pontiff cannot err in the approbation of a Religion. So we too hand down, and more at large, tom. 3. de Religione, lib. 2. cap. 17., and the more recent writers commonly embrace it: Azor. tom. 2. lib. 5. cap. 7. quæst. 2., Valentia supra, and those whom we cite dicto loco; (I add Diana Coordin. to. 9. tr. 5. resol. 23. n. 6., with John of St. Thomas, 2. 2. disp. 9. art. 3. fol. 777. col. 1., Turrianus, in Selectis disp. in censura Theologica, cent. 1. dub. 62. & 65., Granado, controv. 1. de Fide, tract. 7. disp. 5., with Bañes, oppositum hæreticum appellante) — which is to be understood (Suarez pursues) as to its substance, whatever be the case as to circumstances, such as can occur either in the approbation of a Religion not necessary, or in too great a multitude of them, although even in these judgment is not to be passed rashly. (Which explanation, or modification of the conclusion, Diana also adds, n. 8., adducing other examples, namely, if that new Religion be less suitable to the Church, or because its institute is too hard, or too lax, or because from it there follows some confusion in the Church, and a diminution of spiritual fervor in the other Religions. A similar modification Granado

Latin		English
vel quia ex illo aliqua in Ecclesia sequitur confusio, & fervoris spiritualis in aliis Religionibus diminutio. Similem modificationem apposuit Granado, n. 2.) Substantiam autem voco (doctrinam Suarez denuo continuo,) quod Religio approbata, non solum noxia, vel inutilis, sed etiam simpliciter sit via ad perfectionem: in quo graviter erravit Cano, d. lib. 5. cap. 5. contrarium sentiens: nam illud temerarium reputavit D. Th. Opus. 19. præsertim cap. 4. (Joannes etiam à S. Th. in 2. 2. disp. 9. art. 3. fol. 777. col. 1. recensitus, & sequutus à Diana, d. resol. 23. n. 6. eundem Cano graviter impugnat, sicut Granado, d. disp. 5. n. 1.) Et dicta assertio, est valde consentanea Concil. Tridentino sess. 25. de Regular. cap. 16. & Concil. Constantiensi, quod damnavit Uviclephum, & Joannem Hus, quia male sentiebant de Religionibus à Sede Apostolica approbatis, quos refellit Uvaldensis supra, tit. 9. præsertim à cap. 83. Bellarminus, lib. de Monachis, & alii scribes contra hæreticos. Deniq; favet communis sensus Ecclesiæ, ita sentientis de Religionibus approbatis, & contrarium, tanquam scandalosum, & impium damnantis. Ratio vero est: quia hæc etiam est magna pars materiæ moralis: oportet enim ut Ecclesiæ habeat securitatem, & certitudinem, non tantum in præceptis, sed etiam in consiliis, & in via perfectionis. Item, quia approbare Religionem, est quasi canonizare tale institutum, ut sanctum: Ergo ad providentiam Spiritus Sancti spectat, ut in hoc non permittat errare Ecclesiam, quam specialiter regit. ergo credendum non est, id accidere posse.		appended, n. 2.) But I call substance (I continue Suarez's doctrine anew) that the approved Religion is not only not noxious or useless, but also is simply a way to perfection: in which Cano gravely erred, d. lib. 5. cap. 5., thinking the contrary: for St. Thomas reputed that rash, Opus. 19., especially cap. 4. (John of St. Thomas also, in 2. 2. disp. 9. art. 3. fol. 777. col. 1., recounted and followed by Diana, d. resol. 23. n. 6., gravely impugns the same Cano, as does Granado, d. disp. 5. n. 1.) And the said assertion is very consonant with the Council of Trent sess. 25. de Regular. cap. 16., and with the Council of Constance, which condemned Wyclif and John Hus, because they judged ill of the Religions approved by the Apostolic See; whom Waldensis refutes supra, tit. 9., especially à cap. 83., Bellarmine, lib. de Monachis, and others writing against heretics. Finally, the common sense of the Church favors it, thinking thus of the approved Religions, and condemning the contrary as scandalous and impious. But the reason is: because this also is a great part of moral matter; for it behooves that the Church have security and certitude, not only in precepts, but also in counsels, and in the way of perfection. Likewise, because to approve a Religion is as it were to canonize such an institute as holy: therefore it belongs to the providence of the Holy Spirit not to permit the Church, which he specially governs, to err in this; therefore it is not to be believed that this can happen.
71. Hactenus Suarez, loco citato, qui in tom. 4. de Relig. l. 3. c. 4. corollario 2. postquam c. 3. n. 3. asseruit, admissionem Scholasticorum in Societatem Jesu, constituere illos, in vero, & proprio religioso statu, probata assertione sua ex Bulla Gregorii XIII. Quanto fructuosus, de anno 1582. & ex Constitutione Ascendente Domino, de anno 1584. sic ut sequitur ait. Secundo		71. Thus far Suarez, loco citato, who, in tom. 4. de Relig. l. 3. c. 4. corollario 2., after he had asserted, c. 3. n. 3., that the admission of Scholastics into the Society of Jesus constitutes them in a true and proper religious state, his assertion being proved from the Bull of Gregory XIII, Quanto fructuosus, of the year 1582, and from the Constitution Ascendente Domino, of the year 1584, says as follows. Secondly, it is inferred from what has been said

Latin		English
infertur ex dictis, quam sit certa veritas à Pontifice declarata. Existimo enim esse omnino infalibilem, ita ut sine errore in fide negari non possit. Ratio est, quia sententia Pontificis, in his, quæ ad doctrinam pertinent, infalibilem continet certitudinem, ex Christi institutione, & promissione: Ego rogavi pro te, ut non deficiat fides tua, & tu aliquando conversus, confirma fratres tuos. Lucæ 32. & Mathæi 16. Tu es Petrus, & super hanc petram ædificabo Ecclesiam meam, & portæ inferi non prævalebunt adversus eam. Et concessio facta est Joannes 21. Pasce oves meas. Quæ testimonia ita sunt ab Ecclesia intellecta, & perpetua traditione, ac Patrum, Conciliorum, & ipsorum Pontificum definitione firmata, ac declarata, ut suppono ex propria materia (de Fide scilicet) & videri possunt, quæ Gratianus congerit, distinct. 12. sui Decreti, & 24. q. 1. per plura capita, & late Bellarminus, l. 4. de Summo Pontifice, à principio per aliquot capita (quorum non pauca testimonia ego ipse supra cumulavi à n. 17. ad n. 34.) & Turrecremata, in Summa, l. 2. c. 10. Et ob hanc rem observatum semper in Ecclesia fuit, ut graviore fidei quæstiones, & causæ, ad Romanam Sedem, tanquam ad fidei Cathedram, & magistram deferrentur, ut dicitur in cap. Majores, de Baptismo, & sumitur, ex cap. Damnamus, de Summa Trinitate, & Fide Catholica, & cap. Fideli, eod. tit. in 6. cap. Ad abolendam, de Hæreticis, & cap. Præceptis, & cap. Non decet, dist. 12. & cap. Nulli fas, dist. 19. ac tandem ex Conc. Florentino, in Decreto Unionis, & ex Conc. Trident. sess. 7. can. 3. de Baptismo, & ex sess. 25. circa finem, decreto de Delectu ciborum, & plura referunt citati Authores, Simancas, de Catholicis Institutionibus, cap. 45. Valde autem diminuta fuisset Christi Domini providentia circa suam Ecclesiam, si in decidendis talibus quæstionibus ux Cathedra, Vicarium suum labi permetteret; Neque ipse juste posset, sub anathematis vinculo, subditos		how certain is the truth declared by the Pontiff. For I judge it to be altogether infallible, so that it cannot be denied without error in faith. The reason is, because the sentence of the Pontiff, in those things which pertain to doctrine, contains an infallible certitude, from the institution and promise of Christ: I have prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not; and thou, being once converted, confirm thy brethren. Lucæ 32. & Mathæi 16. Thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my Church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against her. And the concession was made, Joannes 21. Feed my sheep. Which testimonies have been so understood by the Church, and so confirmed and declared by perpetual tradition, and by the definition of the Fathers, of the Councils, and of the Pontiffs themselves, that I suppose it from its proper matter (namely, that on Faith); and there may be seen the things which Gratian heaps up, distinct. 12. sui Decreti, & 24. q. 1., through several chapters, and at large Bellarmine, l. 4. de Summo Pontifice, from the beginning through some chapters (not a few of which testimonies I myself have accumulated above, à n. 17. ad n. 34.), and Turrecremata, in Summa, l. 2. c. 10. And for this reason it was always observed in the Church that the graver questions and causes of faith should be referred to the Roman See, as to the Chair and mistress of faith, as is said in cap. Majores, de Baptismo, and is taken ex cap. Damnamus, de Summa Trinitate, & Fide Catholica, & cap. Fideli, eod. tit. in 6. cap. Ad abolendam, de Hæreticis, & cap. Præceptis, & cap. Non decet, dist. 12. & cap. Nulli fas, dist. 19., and at length from the Council of Florence, in Decreto Unionis, and from the Council of Trent, sess. 7. can. 3. de Baptismo, and ex sess. 25. circa finem, the decree de Delectu ciborum; and the cited Authors report more, [as does] Simancas, de Catholicis Institutionibus, cap. 45. But greatly diminished would the providence of Christ the Lord concerning his Church have been, if in deciding such questions ex Cathedra he should permit his Vicar to fall; nor could he himself justly compel his subjects, under the bond of anathema, to stand by these declarations or definitions, if he could err in handing on doctrine. Since therefore it has been shown that the aforesaid Constitution contains

Latin		English
compellere ad standum his declarationibus, seu definitionibus, si in doctrina tradenda errare posset. Cum ergo ostensum sit prædictam Constitutionem, continere declarationem cujusdam veritatis, valde necessariae ad mores Ecclesiae, & ad quietem, & pacem animarum, plane talis declaratio, infalibilem continet certitudinem.		the declaration of a certain truth very necessary to the morals of the Church, and to the quiet and peace of souls, plainly such a declaration contains an infallible certitude.
72. Et hoc confirmari potest ex doctrina Theologorum, & Catholicorum omnium, qui pro certo habent Summum Pontificem non posse errare in Doctrina morum Ecclesiae tradenda; de qua re videri possunt Authores paulo ante citati: nam hæc doctrina multum pertinet ad bonos mores, & ex opposito, multa inferri possunt absurda, & scandala in Ecclesia, quæ paulo inferius, in tertio corollario numerabimus, ut hæc veritas notior fiat. Et è converso, si hæc declaratio Pontificis falsa esse posset, ex illa multa absurda, & contra bonos mores sequerentur, ut quod status religiosus, commutaretur in non religiosum, & quod votum Religionis, impleretur sine statu religioso, & similia. Omnia prædicta docet ad amussim doctissimus P. Francisc. Suarez, quem sequitur Petrus Hurtado de Mendoza, tom. 2. tr. de Fide, disp. 9. sect. 6. n. 36.		72. And this can be confirmed from the doctrine of the Theologians, and of all Catholics, who hold it for certain that the Supreme Pontiff cannot err in handing on to the Church the Doctrine of morals; on which matter the Authors cited a little before may be seen: for this doctrine pertains much to good morals, and from the opposite many absurdities and scandals could be inferred in the Church, which a little below, in the third corollary, we shall enumerate, that this truth may become better known. And conversely, if this declaration of the Pontiff could be false, from it many absurdities, and things against good morals, would follow: as that the religious state would be changed into a non-religious one, and that the vow of Religion would be fulfilled without the religious state, and the like. All the aforesaid the most learned Fr. Francis Suarez teaches exactly, whom Peter Hurtado de Mendoza follows, tom. 2. tr. de Fide, disp. 9. sect. 6. n. 36.
73. Quod si petas, an dicta procedant in Legibus, aut Decretis morum, quæ nec sunt de Juris naturæ, aut juris Divini rebus, sed de indifferentibus, qualia essent præcepta de jejuniis in Adventu, & de communione Eucharistiæ, in tribus anni temporibus? Respondeo cum Diana Coordinato, tom. 9. tr. 9. resol. 13. n. 7. procedere etiam in indifferentibus, in quorum legibus, & Decretis non potest Summus Pontifex ex Cathedra, seu Papa, qua talis decernens errare: quia Ecclesia tenetur Papæ obedire tanquam Pastori suo, & quia non præcipit rem inhonestam, aut bonam, & honestam prohibet: Unde, eo ipso, quod statuit hujusmodi legem, sive de re, quæ antea erat sub consilio, ut in exemplis adductis; sive de alia re, quovis alio		73. But if you ask whether the things said hold in Laws or Decrees of morals which are not about matters of the law of nature, or of divine law, but about indifferent things — such as would be the precepts concerning the fast in Advent, and concerning the communion of the Eucharist at the three seasons of the year? I answer, with Diana Coordinatus, tom. 9. tr. 9. resol. 13. n. 7., that they hold also in indifferent matters, in the laws and Decrees of which the Supreme Pontiff, decreeing ex Cathedra, or as Pope, as such, cannot err: because the Church is bound to obey the Pope as her Pastor, and because he does not command a dishonest thing, nor prohibit a good and honest one. Whence, by the very fact that he establishes a law of this kind, whether about a matter which was previously under counsel, as in the examples adduced, or about another matter

Latin		English
modo indifferenti, nihil aliud facit (verba Dianæ reddo) quam constituere in materia virtutis actum, quem præcipit.		indifferent in any other way whatsoever, he does nothing else (I render Diana's words) than constitute in the matter of virtue the act which he commands.
74. Neque obstat, quod unus Pontifex, ex his Decretis alterare valeat, & mutare, quæ alius statuerat. Neuter enim erravit, sed pro temporum diversitate; quod modo Pontifex conveniens judicat, postea successor, aut ipsemet statuens, prudenter, propter circumstantiam aliquam, inconveniens poterit judicare, & ita alterare, & mutare. Quod bene, & concludenter probatur ex capite: Priscis, 55. distantia, ex capit. Sententiam, 35. quæstione 9. ex Nicolao I. desumpto, ubi lego: Ergo de iudicio Romani Præsulis non retractando, quia nec mos exigit, quod diximus, comprobato, non negamus ejusdem Sedis sententiam posse in melius commutari, cum aut sibi surreptum aliquid fuerit, aut ipsa pro consideratione ætatum, vel temporum, seu gravium necessitatum dispensatione quædam ordinare decrevit. Et in cap. Scit sancta Romana Ecclesia, quod nihil obsunt saluti credentium diversæ pro loco, & tempore constitutiones, vel consuetudines, si illis Canonica non obsistat autoritas. Probatur etiam ex capit. Necessaria, 1. quæst. 7. desumpto ex Epistol. 1. Gelasii I. & ex multis Conciliis: ex magno illo Lateranensi, 1215. Patrum, sub Innocentio III. dicente in capite 50. Non debet reprehensibile judicari, si secundum varietatem temporum statuta quandoque variantur humana, præsertim cum urgens necessitas, vel evidens utilitas id exposcit: quoniam ipse Deus, ex his, quæ in veteri Testamento statuerat, nonnulla mutavit in novo. Ex Conc. Senonensi, in Decreto de unitate Ecclesiæ, & damnatione hæreticorum, ubi legitur: Ecclesia, quæ errare, non potest, diversa, & nonnunquam ... pugnancia licet proposuerit Decreta: nihil tamen est in tanta Decretorum multitudine, quod fidei Orthodoxæ adversetur. Ex Concilio denique Tridentino, sessione 25. capite 18.		74. Nor does it stand in the way, that one Pontiff can alter and change, out of these Decrees, the things which another had established. For neither erred, but [acted] according to the diversity of times: what the Pontiff now judges suitable, afterwards his successor, or he himself establishing, will be able prudently, on account of some circumstance, to judge unsuitable, and so to alter and change it. Which is well and conclusively proved from capite: Priscis, 55. distantia, ex capit. Sententiam, 35. quæstione 9., taken from Nicholas I, where I read: Therefore, the judgment of the Roman Prelate not being to be retracted — since neither does custom require it — what we have said being approved, we do not deny that the sentence of the same See can be changed for the better, when either something has been obtained from her by subreption, or when she herself, out of consideration of ages, or of times, or of grave necessities, has decreed to ordain certain things by dispensation. And in cap. Scit sancta Romana Ecclesia, that diverse constitutions or customs, according to place and time, in no wise hinder the salvation of believers, if Canonical authority does not withstand them. It is proved also from capit. Necessaria, 1. quæst. 7., taken ex Epistol. 1. Gelasii I., and from many Councils: from that great Lateran, of 1215 Fathers, under Innocent III, saying in capite 50. It ought not to be judged reprehensible, if according to the variety of times human statutes are sometimes varied, especially when urgent necessity, or evident utility, demands it: since God himself changed in the New some of the things which he had established in the Old Testament. From the Council of Sens, in Decreto de unitate Ecclesiæ, & damnatione hæreticorum, where it is read: The Church, which cannot err, although she has proposed diverse and sometimes [?] conflicting Decrees, yet there is nothing in so great a multitude of Decrees which is opposed to the Orthodox faith. Finally, from the Council of Trent, sessione 25. capite 18., saying: Wherefore let all know that the most sacred

Latin		English
dicente: Quapropter sciant universi, Sacratissimos Canones exacte ab omnibus, & quoad ejus fieri poterit, indistincte observandos. Quod si urgens, justaque ratio, & major quandoque utilitas postulaverit, cum aliquibus dispensandum esse. Pro eodem argumento, videantur Diana Coordinatus, tomo 9. tractatu 13. numero 8. & plures apud eum, ac Petrum Crespetum in Summa Ecclesiastica Disciplina, verbo Canones Patrum, aliquando necessitate variantur, & immutantur, & verbo Traditiones Patrum, quandoque variantur.		Canons are to be exactly observed by all, and, so far as it can be done, without distinction. But if an urgent and just reason, and sometimes a greater utility, shall demand it, dispensation is to be made with some. For the same argument, see Diana Coordinatus, tomo 9. tractatu 13. numero 8., and many in him, and Peter Crespet in Summa Ecclesiastica Disciplina, verbo Canones Patrum, aliquando necessitate variantur, & immutantur, & verbo Traditiones Patrum, quandoque variantur.
75. Quod si iterum petas, An Summus Pontifex errare possit in Constitutione, aut Decreto facto in rebus fidei, aut morum pro una Provincia, aut Diœcesi? Respondet Diana, de resolutione 13. numero 6. quod quamvis aliqui sentiant errare posse; quia tunc munus Pontificis gerere non videatur; eo quod Ecclesiam Universalem illo non adstringat Decreto, ipse tamen credit; cum Bannez 2. 2. quæstione 1. articulo 10. dubio 6. conclusione 4. de fide esse; nec tunc errare posse Pontificem. Quia Pontifex; quatenus supremus est Pastor; legem; aut Decretum statuit obligantem aliquam Provinciam, vel Diœcesim: quia secundum hanc rationem, non solum Regimen totius Ecclesiæ illi commissum est, sed etiam cujuslibet Provinciæ, & Parochiæ. Si ergo respectu totius Ecclesiæ errare non potest, quia illius est suprema regula veritatis; cum etiam cujuslibet Provinciæ, & Parochiæ respectu, sit eadem regula, sane efficitur errare non posse respectu Provinciæ, aut Parochiæ.		75. But if you ask again, Whether the Supreme Pontiff can err in a Constitution, or Decree, made in matters of faith or of morals for one Province or Diocese? Diana answers, de resolutione 13. numero 6., that although some think he can err — because then he does not seem to bear the office of Pontiff, in that he does not bind the Universal Church by that Decree — he himself nevertheless believes, with Bañes 2. 2. quæstione 1. articulo 10. dubio 6. conclusione 4., that it is of faith that neither then can the Pontiff err. Because the Pontiff, inasmuch as he is supreme Pastor, establishes a law or Decree obliging some Province or Diocese: because according to this account, not only the Government of the whole Church has been committed to him, but also that of any Province and Parish whatsoever. If, therefore, in respect of the whole Church he cannot err, because he is her supreme rule of truth, since in respect also of any Province and Parish whatsoever he is the same rule, it is soundly brought about that he cannot err in respect of a Province or Parish.
76. Secundo, si admittatur errare posse Pontificem in statuto speciali, præcipiendo observari in aliqua Provincia, vel Parochia; quæ contraria sunt legi divinæ, aut naturali, videtur admitti errare posse circa totam Ecclesiam: quia Ecclesia Universalis sufficiens habet fundamentum ad credendum sic ordinatum, & præceptum		76. Secondly, if it be admitted that the Pontiff can err in a special statute, commanding things contrary to the divine or natural law to be observed in some Province or Parish, it seems to be admitted that he can err concerning the whole Church: because the Universal Church has a sufficient foundation for believing that what is so ordained and commanded is good, and to be observed by that Province or Parish.

Latin		English
bonum esse, & servandum ab illa Provincia, seu Parochia: Sed tale iudicium est erroneum: Ergo ex errore speciali Pontificis, cogitur Ecclesia universalis errare, quod dici non potest.		But such a judgment is erroneous. Therefore, from a special error of the Pontiff, the universal Church is forced to err, which cannot be said.
77. Ultimo suppono, tanquam de fide certum, Alexandrum Septimum, conditorem Decretorum, de quibus in titulo quaestionis, fuisse verum Pontificem Summum, & Divi Petri Apostoli successorem, in Sede Apostolica Romana. Hoc suppositum probo autoritate, & doctrina doctissimorum Theologorum Franc. Suarez, tractatu de Fide, disputatione 5. sectione 8. num. 12. fol. mihi 105. & aliorum; quos ipse, ut videbimus recenset, nec non Roderici de Arriaga, in Cursu Theologico, tomo 5. tract. de Fide, dispositione 7. sectione 8. Franc. Amici, in simili cursu, tomo 4. dispositione 6. sectione 5. Petri de Lorca, in 2. 2. quaest. 1. articulo 1. dispositione 2. in fine, pagina 12. Mart. Bonacinæ in Summa, tomo 3. disputatione 1. quaestione 2. puncto 1. numero 9. cum duobus sequentibus, Castro Palai, tomo 1. tractatu 4. de Fide, disp. 1. sectione 13. §. 5. à numero 325. Petri Hurtado de Mendoza, tomo 2. tractatu de Fide, disputatione 37. per totam. Jacobi Granado, controversia 1. de Fide, tractatu 7. disputatione 1. sectione 3. numero 15. & Dianæ Coordinati, tomo 9. tractatu 5. resolutione 6. cujus, & Suarez doctrinas tradam, ut suppositi nostri veritas elucescat.		77. Lastly, I suppose, as certain of faith, that Alexander the Seventh, the framer of the Decrees of which the title of the question treats, was the true Supreme Pontiff, and the successor of the Blessed Apostle Peter in the Roman Apostolic See. This supposition I prove by the authority and doctrine of the most learned Theologians: Franc. Suarez, tractatu de Fide, disputatione 5. sectione 8. num. 12. fol. mihi 105., and of others, whom he himself, as we shall see, recounts; and also of Roderick de Arriaga, in Cursu Theologico, tomo 5. tract. de Fide, dispositione 7. sectione 8.; Franc. Amico, in simili cursu, tomo 4. dispositione 6. sectione 5.; Peter de Lorca, in 2. 2. quaest. 1. articulo 1. dispositione 2. in fine, pagina 12.; Mart. Bonacina in Summa, tomo 3. disputatione 1. quaestione 2. puncto 1. numero 9. cum duobus sequentibus; Castro Palao, tomo 1. tractatu 4. de Fide, disp. 1. sectione 13. §. 5. à numero 325.; Peter Hurtado de Mendoza, tomo 2. tractatu de Fide, disputatione 37. per totam.; James Granado, controversia 1. de Fide, tractatu 7. disputatione 1. sectione 3. numero 15.; and Diana Coordinatus, tomo 9. tractatu 5. resolutione 6.: whose doctrines, and those of Suarez, I shall set forth, that the truth of our supposition may shine out.
78. Pater itaque Suarez, loco citato, ita scripsit. In ultimo argumento petitur quaestio superioribus annis valde controversa, An sit de fide hunc Pontificem, esse verum Pontificem? Quam non possum nunc pro dignitate disputare; breviter tamen. Multi sentiunt non esse hoc de fide; sed vix poterunt sustinere certitudinem fidei in rebus definitis à Pontifice, nisi consequenter dicant, non solum Pontificem verum; sed etiam nec reputatum ab Ecclesia, posse		78. Father Suarez, therefore, loco citato, wrote thus. In the last argument a question is raised, in former years much controverted, Whether it be of faith that this Pontiff is the true Pontiff? Which I cannot now dispute as it deserves; briefly, however. Many think that this is not of faith; but they will scarcely be able to sustain the certitude of faith in the matters defined by the Pontiff, unless they consequently say that not only a true Pontiff, but even one not so reputed by the Church, cannot err in defining: which Bellarmine holds, supra. I, however,

Latin		English
errare definiendo: quod censet Bellarminus, supra. Ego tamen fere ante triginta annos, hoc est anno Domini 1585. docui Romæ, esse de fide hunc Pontificem; esse verum Pontificem; postquam sufficienti consensu totius Ecclesiæ receptus est; & ita approbatus, ut omnes illi obedire teneantur, etiam in definitionibus fidei; quia hæc obligatio necessario supponit illam certam fidem, & illa veritas particularis, est sufficienter contenta in universali dogmate fidei, quod successor Petri est verus Pontifex, & tunc sufficienter applicatur, & fidelibus proponitur. Quam sententiam postea nostri, vel publicis disputationibus defenderunt, vel typis etiam nonnulli mandarunt. Ex quibus consuli potest Salmeron, libro 1. in Epistola Pauli, parte 2. disputatione de Ecclesia, satis ante medium à §. Angeli etiam, Albertinus, tomo 1. Corollario 3. Theologico, ex tertio principio Philosophico, quæstione 3. à numero 10. Valentia, supra (tomo 3. disputatione 1. quæstione 1. puncto 7.) in §. 38. versic. Secunda ratio, licet illius probatio, nihil concludat. Reliqua videri possunt in supra citatis Authoribus. Hactenus Suarez.		nearly thirty years ago, that is, in the year of the Lord 1585, taught at Rome, that it is of faith that this Pontiff is the true Pontiff, after he has been received by the sufficient consent of the whole Church, and so approved that all are bound to obey him, even in the definitions of faith; because this obligation necessarily supposes that certain faith, and that particular truth is sufficiently contained in the universal dogma of faith, that the successor of Peter is the true Pontiff, and then it is sufficiently applied and proposed to the faithful. Which opinion our men afterwards either defended in public disputations, or some even committed to print. Of whom may be consulted Salmeron, libro 1. in Epistola Pauli, parte 2. disputatione de Ecclesia, satis ante medium à §. Angeli etiam; Albertinus, tomo 1. Corollario 3. Theologico, from the third Philosophical principle, quæstione 3. à numero 10.; Valentia, supra (tomo 3. disputatione 1. quæstione 1. puncto 7.) in §. 38. versic. Secunda ratio, although his proof concludes nothing. The rest may be seen in the Authors cited above. Thus far Suarez.
79. Antoninus Diana in resolutione sexta citata, inquisito, An sit omnino de fide, v. gr. hunc numero Innocentium X. esse verum Pontificem, & verum Petri successorem? & recensito pro parte negativa Bannez 2. 2. quæstione 1. articulo 10. dubio 2. ad 2. Cajetano, 2. 2. quæstione 1. articulo 3. ad 4. Castro, adversus hæreses, libro 1. capite 9. affirmativam tenet, cum Card. de Lugo, de Fide, disputatione 5. sectione 13. §. 5. numero 316. Suarez, de Fide, disputatione 5. sectione 8. numero 12. Oviedo, de Fide, controversia 4. puncto 7. numero 86. Hurtado, loco citato; Arriaga, in Cursu Theologico, tomo 5. disputatione 7. sectione 8. numero 50. cum sequentibus, Tannero, tomo 3. disputatione 1. quæstione 1. dubio 5 numero 146. Castro Palao, tomo 1. tractatu 4. disp. 1. pun. 5. §. 2. numero		79. Antoninus Diana, in the sixth resolution cited, having inquired, Whether it be altogether of faith that, e.g., this individual Innocent X is the true Pontiff, and the true successor of Peter?, and having recounted for the negative side Bañes 2. 2. quæstione 1. articulo 10. dubio 2. ad 2., Cajetan, 2. 2. quæstione 1. articulo 3. ad 4., Castro, adversus hæreses, libro 1. capite 9., holds the affirmative, with Card. de Lugo, de Fide, disputatione 5. sectione 13. §. 5. numero 316.; Suarez, de Fide, disputatione 5. sectione 8. numero 12.; Oviedo, de Fide, controversia 4. puncto 7. numero 86.; Hurtado, loco citato; Arriaga, in Cursu Theologico, tomo 5. disputatione 7. sectione 8. numero 50. cum sequentibus; Tanner, tomo 3. disputatione 1. quæstione 1. dubio 5 numero 146.; Castro Palao, tomo 1. tractatu 4. disp. 1. pun. 5. §. 2. numero 9. cum sequentibus; Amico in Cursu Theologico, tomo 3. disp. 6. sect. 5. numero 152.; Gerund. de Episcopo, to. 2 lib. 5. disp. 3.

Latin		English
9. cum sequentibus, Amico in Cursu Theologico, tomo 3. disp. 6. sect. 5. numero 152. Gerund. de Episcopo, to. 2 lib. 5. disp. 3. num. 56. Comitolu, resp. libr. 1. quæst. 99. Valentina, ubi supra; quæstione 5. numero 39. Sylvio, in Controversis Fidei, lib. 4. quæst. 2. artic. 8. Peurono, de Reg. Aristocratia, to. 2. capite 8. per totum. Verricelli, in Quæstionum Moraliu tractatu 8. quæst. 24. num 7. Poncio, in Cursu Theologico, disp. 28. quæst. 1. conclusione 9. numero 13. & 14. Joanne de St. Thoma, 2. 2. quæst. 1. disput. 8. artic. 2. per totum. Adriano Petro de Walenbruch, in Examine principiorum Fidei, par. 2. controvers. 7. numero 50. Bordono, in Sacro Tribunali, capite 5. quæst. 6. num. 16. & Bonacina, loco citato.		num. 56.; Comitulus, resp. libr. 1. quæst. 99.; Valentina, ubi supra; quæstione 5. numero 39.; Sylvius, in Controversis Fidei, lib. 4. quæst. 2. artic. 8.; Peuronus, de Reg. Aristocratia, to. 2. capite 8. per totum.; Verricelli, in Quæstionum Moraliu tractatu 8. quæst. 24. num 7.; Poncius, in Cursu Theologico, disp. 28. quæst. 1. conclusione 9. numero 13. & 14.; John of St. Thomas, 2. 2. quæst. 1. disput. 8. artic. 2. per totum.; Adrian Peter de Walenburgh, in Examine principiorum Fidei, par. 2. controvers. 7. numero 50.; Bordonus, in Sacro Tribunali, capite 5. quæst. 6. num. 16.; and Bonacina, loco citato.
80. Et addit Diana: Nostra sententia videtur esse sententia Augustini, tom. 6. in Epistol. contra potest. Donat. & tom. 2. epist. 115. Irenei, lib. 3. capite 3. Basilii, Ambrosii, Hieronymi, quos refert Bannez, d. art. 10. de Authoitate Papæ. Et favere, ait, Concilia: Sextum enim Generale, confessum est; Agathonem verum Pontificem, sicut Chalcedonense, confessum est Leonem, Milevitanum, Innocentium III. Et in capite de Libellis dist. 20. tanquam veri, & legitimi Pontifices Silverius, Sozimus, Innocentius, Syricius, Cœlestinus, Leo, Hilarius, Gelasius, Ormisda, & Gregorius approbantur, à Leone Papa Quarto. Et huic sententiæ magnum robur (inquit ipse Diana) cedit Clemens Octavus, qui teste Puente Hurtado, ubi supra carceravit nonnullos Doctores, qui tunc oppositum censuerunt, eosque jubens adire Romam, rationem reddituros illius sententiæ.		80. And Diana adds: Our opinion seems to be the opinion of Augustine, tom. 6. in Epistol. contra potest. Donat. & tom. 2. epist. 115., of Irenæus, lib. 3. capite 3., of Basil, Ambrose, Jerome, whom Bañes reports, d. art. 10. de Authoitate Papæ. And the Councils favor it, he says: for the Sixth General confessed Agatho to be the true Pontiff, as that of Chalcedon confessed Leo, and the Milevitan, Innocent III. And in capite de Libellis dist. 20., Silverius, Zosimus, Innocent, Siricius, Celestine, Leo, Hilary, Gelasius, Hormisdas, and Gregory are approved, by Pope Leo the Fourth, as true and legitimate Pontiffs. And to this opinion great strength (says Diana himself) is yielded by Clement the Eighth, who, on the testimony of Puente Hurtado, ubi supra, imprisoned certain Doctors who then judged the opposite, ordering them to go to Rome, to render an account of that opinion.
81. Pro hac sententia fundanda, supponit Diana Summum Pontificem, posse considerari dupliciter. Primo, quando eligitur, & adoratur illegitime, vel cum suspicione illegitimitatis. Secundo, quando tam legitime eligitur, & adoratur, ut tota Ecclesia illum suscipiat, ut nunc		81. For the establishing of this opinion, Diana supposes that the Supreme Pontiff can be considered in two ways. First, when he is elected and adored illegitimately, or with a suspicion of illegitimacy. Secondly, when he is so legitimately elected and adored that the whole Church receives him, as now (he says)

Latin		English
(inquit) Dominus noster Innocentius X. (ego autem ut nunc Innocentius XI.) sine ullo controversiæ vestigio, tenet Christianæ Reipublicæ clavum, clavesque Petri. Si loquamur de Pontifice in prima consideratione, (ait Diana) non est quæstio: quia dum est probabile fundamentum, de illegitimitate Pontificis, non potest fide divina credi eum esse successorem Petri: quia fides divina non potest exerceri, quando est locus hæsitationi prudenti: probabile autem fundamentum, occasionem præbet hæsitationi prudenti. Quapropter non quiescit Ecclesia, antequam erecto omni dubitandi fundamento, tollantur schismatum occasiones. Est igitur quæstio in secunda consideratione, Utrum sit Fide Divina credendum, Innocentium Undecimum, & alios Pontifices pacifice susceptos, esse legitimos successores Petri. Et respondet Diana, credendum esse fide Divina, omnes, & singulos ejusmodi Pontifices, esse legitimos successores Petri. Et quidem in hoc sensu, hanc tenet sententiam Suarez, ibi: Postquam sufficienti consensu totius Ecclesiæ receptus est, & alii tenere debent.		our Lord Innocent X — but I: as now Innocent XI — without any vestige of controversy holds the helm of the Christian Commonwealth, and the keys of Peter. If we speak of the Pontiff in the first consideration (says Diana), there is no question: because so long as there is a probable foundation concerning the illegitimacy of the Pontiff, it cannot be believed with divine faith that he is the successor of Peter: because divine faith cannot be exercised when there is room for prudent hesitation; but a probable foundation affords occasion for prudent hesitation. Wherefore the Church does not rest until, every foundation for doubting being removed [?], the occasions of schisms are taken away. The question, therefore, is in the second consideration: Whether it is to be believed with Divine Faith that Innocent the Eleventh, and other Pontiffs peacefully received, are the legitimate successors of Peter. And Diana answers that it is to be believed with Divine faith that all and each of the Pontiffs of this kind are the legitimate successors of Peter. And indeed in this sense Suarez holds this opinion, there: After he has been received by the sufficient consent of the whole Church; and others ought to hold it.
82. Probatur primo hæc sententia, ex Bulla Martini V. quæ habetur in Concilio Constantiensi, in qua disponit, ut hæretici ad Ecclesiam redeuntes credant Papam canonicè electum, qui pro tempore fuerit (expresso ejus nomine) esse successorem Petri, &c. Ergo snpponit Concilium nunc determinate de moderno, v. gr. Innocentio XI. expresso ejus nomine, debere credi esse Petri successorem.		82. This opinion is proved first from the Bull of Martin V, which is had in the Council of Constance, in which he disposes that heretics returning to the Church should believe that the Pope canonically elected, whoever he shall be for the time being (his name being expressed), is the successor of Peter, etc. Therefore the Council supposes that now, determinately concerning the present Pope, e.g., Innocent XI, his name being expressed, it must be believed that he is the successor of Peter.
83. Secundo, quia multa Concilia determinate agnoscunt pro tali Petri successore, eum Pontificem, qui tunc præerat: quod etiam fuerunt plures Ecclesiæ Patres, quorum non pauci recensiti sunt supra, numero 4. & 80. At non est major ratio de uno, quam de alio. Ergo idem de omnibus, canonicè electis, & à tota recepti Ecclesia, dicendum est.		83. Secondly, because many Councils determinately acknowledge as such a successor of Peter that Pontiff who then presided: which many Fathers of the Church also did [?], not a few of whom have been recounted supra, numero 4. & 80. But there is no greater reason concerning one than concerning another. Therefore the same is to be said of all who are canonically elected and received by the whole Church.

Latin		English
84. Tertio, quia si non constat de fide Pium IV. fuisse verum Pontificem, neque constabit Concilium Tridentinum esse validum, cum ab illius approbatione totam suam acceperit vim. Id autem fere hæreticum est.		84. Thirdly, because if it is not established of faith that Pius IV was the true Pontiff, neither will it be established that the Council of Trent is valid, since it received all its force from his approbation. But that is well-nigh heretical.
85. Quarto, quia si non esset de fide hunc numero Pontificem v. gr. Innocentium XI. esse verum Pontificem, & successorem D. Petri, quidquid de Judice controversiarum in Ecclesia, ut certum de fide, creditur, esset dubio procul ridiculum; nam quomodo de fide debeat credere, Judicem dari controversiarum in Ecclesia, si non possum, ex fide, quis ille sit, dicere? Ad quid enim deserviret pro praxi, assensus de huiusmodi Judicis quasi vaga existentia? Non utique teneremur ex fide, in dictis controversiis, Papam adire. Quilibet enim dicere posset fides solum docet; me teneri Judicem adire controversiarum; sed non mihi dicit, illum esse Innocentium XI. Ergo, ex fide, non teneor illum adire, aut illi decidenti credere. Ergo, ut ridiculum non sit, quod de Judice dicitur controversiarum, dici debet, de fide esse Innocentium XI. esse verum Pontificem, & successorem D. Petri.		85. Fourthly, because if it were not of faith that this individual Pontiff, e.g., Innocent XI, is the true Pontiff and successor of St. Peter, whatever is believed as certain of faith concerning the Judge of controversies in the Church would beyond doubt be ridiculous; for how am I bound to believe of faith that a Judge of controversies is given in the Church, if I cannot, from faith, say who he is? For to what would an assent concerning the, as it were, vague existence of such a Judge serve for practice? We should assuredly not be bound from faith, in the said controversies, to go to the Pope. For anyone could say: faith teaches only that I am bound to go to the Judge of controversies; but it does not tell me that he is Innocent XI. Therefore, from faith, I am not bound to go to him, or to believe him deciding. Therefore, that what is said of the Judge of controversies may not be ridiculous, it must be said that it is of faith that Innocent XI is the true Pontiff and successor of St. Peter.
86. Quinto probatur, quia omnis propositio de fide, potest inferri ex duplici propositione de fide, & etiam, ut aliis placet, ex una de fide, & altera lumine naturali contenta. Sed ista propositio, Papa definiens non potest errare, est certa de fide. Ergo inferri potest ex duplici præmissa, modo dicto; quod tamen nullo modo fieri potest, ut patebit discurrenti, nisi propositio ista sit de fide: Hic Pontifex definiens, est verus Papa. Nam in quocumque syllogismo illa inferatur conclusio, Papa definiens non potest errare, debet assumi ut minor, Hic Pontifex definiens, est verus Papa, quæ cum non sit nota lumine naturali, necessario debet esse de fide, aliàs conclusio non esset de fide.		86. Fifthly it is proved, because every proposition of faith can be inferred from two propositions of faith, and also, as others hold, from one of faith and another contained in the natural light. But this proposition, The Pope defining cannot err, is certain of faith. Therefore it can be inferred from two premises, in the manner stated; which nevertheless can in no way be done, as will be plain to one who runs through it, unless this proposition be of faith: This Pontiff defining is the true Pope. For in whatever syllogism that conclusion be inferred, The Pope defining cannot err, there must be assumed as the minor, This Pontiff defining is the true Pope, which, since it is not known by the natural light, must necessarily be of faith; otherwise the conclusion would not be of faith.
87. Sed huic argumento respondet Bannez, ubi supra, non requiri, ut aliqua		87. But to this argument Bañes answers, ubi supra, that it is not required, in order that some conclusio de fide inferatur, utramque præmissam esse de fide, vel unam de fide, & alteram evidentem; sed sufficere, unam esse de fide, & alteram moraliter certam: quia tunc conclusio non sequitur ex illa propositione moraliter certa, tanquam ex causa, vel tanquam ex conditione sine qua non, sive ut applicante. Et adducit Exemplum iu prædicatore, qui si tibi rite proponit Evangelicam doctrinam, fide divina teneris veritatibus ab eo propositis assentiri: cum tamen non sit fide divina certum, hunc prædicatorem esse infalibilis veritatis.		conclusion of faith be inferred, that both premises be of faith, or one of faith and the other evident; but that it suffices that one be of faith and the other morally certain: because then the conclusion follows from that morally certain proposition not as from a cause, but as from a condition without which not, or as applying it. And he adduces the Example of a preacher, who, if he duly proposes to you the Evangelical doctrine, you are bound with divine faith to assent to the truths proposed by him: although nevertheless it is not certain with divine faith that this preacher is of infallible truth.

Latin		English
88. At replicat Diana, & solutionem præcludere intendit, argumento ducto ab inconvenienti: quia si vera illa esset, sequeretur hanc propositionem esse de fide: sub hac numero Hostia consecrata, est Corpus Christi: quia revera infertur per evidentem consequentiam ex una de fide, qualis est ista: In omni Hostia debite consecrata, est Corpus Christi, & insuper infertur tanquam ex conditione, & ut applicante ex altera certa moraliter, scilicet: Hæc Hostia est debite consecrata: Ergo sub hac Hostia est Corpus Christi: erit propositio de fide.		88. But Diana replies, and intends to preclude the solution, by an argument drawn from an inconvenience: because if that were true, it would follow that this proposition is of faith: under this individual consecrated Host is the Body of Christ: because in truth it is inferred by an evident consequence from one [proposition] of faith, such as is this: In every duly consecrated Host is the Body of Christ, and moreover it is inferred, as from a condition and as applying, from another morally certain one, namely: This Host is duly consecrated: Therefore under this Host is the Body of Christ will be a proposition of faith.
Idem argumentum potest de his formari propositionibus. Hic parvulus baptizatus recipit gratiam: Iste qui ordinatur est Sacerdos: & de aliis similibus: quas compertum est apud omnes, non esse de fide, cum possit illis subesse falsum, ex defectu intentionis baptizantis, ordinantis, & consecrantis. Neque exemplum de prædicatore obstat, quia licet prædicator, aliis in rebus, non sit infalibilis veritatis: at prout hic, & nunc prædicat, credere debes infalibilis veritatis esse: siquidem obligaris ejus dictis fide divina assentiri.		The same argument can be formed of these propositions: This baptized infant receives grace: This man who is ordained is a Priest: and of others like them: which it is ascertained among all are not of faith, since falsity can underlie them, from a defect of intention in the one baptizing, ordaining, and consecrating. Nor does the example of the preacher stand in the way, because although the preacher, in other matters, is not of infallible truth, yet as he here and now preaches, you must believe him to be of infallible truth; since you are obliged to assent to his words with divine faith.
89. Neque contra nostram sententiam obstat, si dicatur: Non est de fide certum, Innocentium XI. esse baptizatum, aut nullum defectum substantialem in ejus electione intervenisse. Ergo non est de fide Innocentium XI. esse verum, &		89. Nor does it stand against our opinion, if it be said: It is not certain of faith that Innocent XI is baptized, or that no substantial defect intervened in his election. Therefore it is not of faith that Innocent XI is the true and legitimate Pontiff, successor of Peter, and of infallible truth. For it does not stand in the way, because legitimum Pontificem, Petri successorem, & infalibilis veritatis. Non enim obstat, quia licet antecedens non sit de fide; est tamen consequens, postquam communi Ecclesiæ consensu habitus ille est pro vero Pontifice: & successore Petri: quia illa, cum columna sit veritatis, errare non potest in illo consensu. Quibus suppositis, sit.		although the antecedent is not of faith, the consequent nevertheless is, after he has by the common consent of the Church been held for the true Pontiff and successor of Peter: because she, since she is the pillar of truth, cannot err in that consent. These things being supposed, be it as follows.

Latin		English
CONCLUSIO I.		CONCLUSION I.
90. Omni certitudine tenendum est; prædictas propositiones esse vere damnatas scandalosas, ita ut neque actu interno, neque externo, possit aliquis dubium formare, de hac veritate.		90. It is to be held with all certitude that the aforesaid propositions are truly condemned as scandalous, so that neither by an internal nor by an external act can anyone form a doubt about this truth.
Conclusionem istam probo primo . Omnino certum, & verum est, Pontificem, & legitimum Petri, in Sede Romana successorem, ex Cathedra, seu qua Summum Pontificem, & non qua Doctorem particularem, doctrinam nedum Fidei, sed etiam morum universis Christi fidelibus tradendo, aut prohibendo, errare non posse, tradendo scilicet falsam, & animarum saluti noxiam, & præjudicalem, & veram, & proficuum dictæ saluti prohibendo. Ergo etiam omnino certum est, & verum, ita ut nullus, aut actu interno, aut externo propositiones prædictas ex Cathedra damnatas ab Alexandro Septimo, vere tales esse, ut tales habendas, in dubium revocare possit.		I prove this conclusion first . It is altogether certain and true that the Pontiff, and legitimate successor of Peter in the Roman See, ex Cathedra , or as Supreme Pontiff, and not as a particular Doctor, in handing on or in prohibiting to all the faithful of Christ a doctrine not only of Faith but also of morals, cannot err — namely, by handing on a false doctrine, noxious and prejudicial to the salvation of souls, and by prohibiting a true one profitable to the said salvation. Therefore it is also altogether certain and true that no one can, either by an internal or by an external act, call into doubt that the aforesaid propositions condemned ex Cathedra by Alexander the Seventh are truly such, and are to be held as such.
91. Antecedens, est notum, id enim, quod continet in primis, est, verum, & legitimum, Romanum Pontificem, succedere Apostolo Petro in primatu Ecclesiæ; & in potestate illi à Christo Domino tradita Joannis 21. dum dixit, Pasce oves meas. Hæc Catholica veritas supra firmata est in 4. Notabili, seu supposito à numero 4. ad numer. 8. inclusive , ex quamplurimis Sanctis, Ecclesiæ Patribus, Conciliis, & Pontificibus Summis: & ita quidem efficaciter, ut à nullo Catholico negari possit, aut in dubium revocari.		91. The antecedent is known; for that which it contains in the first place is that the true and legitimate Roman Pontiff succeeds the Apostle Peter in the primacy of the Church, and in the power delivered to him by Christ the Lord, Joannis 21. , when he said, Feed my sheep . This Catholic truth was established above in the 4th Notable, or supposition, à numero 4. ad numer. 8. inclusive , out of very many Saints, Fathers of the Church, Councils, and Supreme Pontiffs; and indeed so efficaciously that it cannot be denied by any Catholic, or called into doubt.
92. Secundo continet, Summum Pontificem, esto errare possit quatenus		92. Secondly, it contains that the Supreme Pontiff — granted that he can err inasmuch as

Latin		English
persona particularis, seu privata, & qua Doctor particularis, & non solum in doctrina morum sed etiam fidei, juxta ea, quæ dicta sunt numero 12. 61. 62. 67. & 70. Et esto errare possit, etiam, ut Ecclesiæ caput in controversis facti, ad tradita numero 11. tamen in neutra Doctrina Fidei, & morum errare potest, in quantum Ecclesiæ Caput, Doctor, & Pastor, ut eam ut talis doceat, quasi ex Cathedra, seu in quantum utitur Magisterio, & potestate pascendi Christi fideles, sibi in Petro ab eodem Christo tradita, & omnibus in Apostolica Sede legitime sedentibus, ut dictum est numero 17. & sequentibus, quoad res Fidei, & quoad res morum, à numero 52. ad 56. & signanter, num. 74. 75. & 76.		he is a particular or private person, and as a particular Doctor, and not only in the doctrine of morals but also of faith, according to those things which have been said numero 12. 61. 62. 67. & 70.; and granted that he can err, even as head of the Church, in controversies of fact, according to what was handed down numero 11. — nevertheless in neither Doctrine, of Faith and of morals, can he err, inasmuch as he is Head, Doctor, and Pastor of the Church, so as to teach her as such, as it were ex Cathedra, or inasmuch as he uses the Magisterium and the power of feeding the faithful of Christ delivered to him in Peter by the same Christ, and to all who legitimately sit in the Apostolic See, as was said numero 17. & sequentibus, as regards matters of Faith, and as regards matters of morals, à numero 52. ad 56., and signally, num. 74. 75. & 76.
93. Consequentia ostenditur, quia omnino constat in Ecclesia id, quod affirmat, scilicet Alexandrum Septimum, dictas damnavisse, & prohibuisse propositiones, non uti Doctorem particularem, & ut personam privatam, sed uti Doctorem, & Pastorem universalem Ecclesiæ, & ex Petri Cathedra. Quod certe ex ipsorum Decretorum inspectione evidentissimum fit. In primo enim sic lego.		93. The consequence is shown, because that which it affirms is altogether established in the Church, namely, that Alexander the Seventh condemned and prohibited the said propositions, not as a particular Doctor and as a private person, but as universal Doctor and Pastor of the Church, and from the Chair of Peter. Which indeed becomes most evident from the inspection of the Decrees themselves. For in the first I read thus.
94. Sanctissimus Dominus noster audivit, non sine magno animi sui mærore, complures opiniones Christianæ disciplinæ relaxativas, & animarum perniciem inferentes, partim antiquatas, iterum suscitari, partim noviter prodire, & summam illam luxuriantium ingeniorum licentiam in dies magis ex crescere, per quam in rebus ad conscientiam pertinentibus, modus opinandi irrepsit, alienus omnino ab Evangelica simplicitate, Sanctorumq; Patrum doctrina, & quem, si pro forte: sequerentur regula fideles in praxi sequuntur, ingens irruptura esset, Christiana vita corruptela. Quare ne ullo unquam tempore viam salutis, quam suprema veritas Deus, cujus verba, in æternum permanent, strictam esse definivit, in animarum perniciem		94. Our Most Holy Lord has heard, not without great grief of his mind, that very many opinions relaxing Christian discipline and bringing on the ruin of souls, partly antiquated, are again being raised up, partly are newly coming forth, and that that utmost license of luxuriating wits is daily growing greater, through which, in matters pertaining to conscience, a manner of opining has crept in altogether alien from Evangelical simplicity and from the doctrine of the holy Fathers; and which, if the faithful should follow it as a rule in practice [?], an immense corruption of Christian life would burst in. Wherefore, lest at any time it should happen that the way of salvation — which the supreme truth, God, whose words remain for ever, has defined to be strait — should be widened, or rather perverted, to the ruin of souls, the same our Most Holy Lord, that he might, out of his Pastoral solicitude, call back

Latin		English
dilatari, seu verius perverti contingeret, idem Sanctissimus Dominus Noster, ut Oves sibi creditas, ab hujusmodi spatiosa, lataque, per quam itur ad perditionem viam, pro Pastoralis solitudine, in rectam semitam evocaret, earumdem opinionum examen, pluribus in Sacra Theologia Magistris, & deinde Eminentissimis, & Reverendissimis Dominis Cardinalibus, contra hæreticam pravitatem Generalibus Inquisitoribus serio commisit, qui tantum negotium strenue aggressi, ei que sedulo incumbentes, & mature discussis, usque ad hanc diem, infra scriptis propositionibus, super unaquaque ipsarum, sua suffragia, Sanctitati suæ sigillatim exposuerunt.		the Sheep committed to him from this sort of spacious and broad way, by which one goes to perdition, into the right path, seriously committed the examination of the same opinions to several Masters in Sacred Theology, and then to the Most Eminent and Most Reverend Lord Cardinals, General Inquisitors against heretical pravity; who, vigorously undertaking so great a business, and diligently applying themselves to it, and the below-written propositions having been maturely discussed down to this day, set forth their suffrages upon each one of them singly to His Holiness.
95. In quo quidem Decreti exordio plura ad rem veniunt ponderanda. Primum est, usum fuisse Alexandrum consiliis, & suffragiis, nedum plurimorum in Sacra Theologia Magistrorum, sed etiam Sacræ Congregationis Eminentissimorum Cardinalium, Generalium Inquisitorum contra hæreticam pravitatem, post maturum uniuscujusque propositionis examen, & & sedulam discussionem: quibus usus fuit, ut humano modo so haberet in dijudicandis prædictis propositionibus. Licet enim assistentia Spiritus Sancti non fuerit ei promissa in Petro pro definiendis rebus Fidei, & morum, dependenter ab alicujus consilio, aut assensu, ut licite tamen, & prudenter operetur, consilio indiget alieno, ut dictum est numero 45. & 46. quod certe non fuisset ab Alexandro petitum, & multo minus à tot, & talibus Consiliariis, & Consultoribus, si ut privatus Doctor fuisset processurus.		95. In which exordium of the Decree there are indeed several things that come to be weighed as pertinent to the matter. The first is that Alexander used the counsels and suffrages, not only of very many Masters in Sacred Theology, but also of the Sacred Congregation of the Most Eminent Cardinals, General Inquisitors against heretical pravity, after a mature examination and diligent discussion of each single proposition: which he used, that he might bear himself in a human manner in adjudging the aforesaid propositions. For although the assistance of the Holy Spirit was not promised to him in Peter for defining matters of Faith and of morals dependently upon anyone's counsel or assent, yet, that he may act lawfully and prudently, he needs another's counsel, as was said numero 45. & 46.: which assuredly would not have been sought by Alexander, and much less from so many and such Counsellors and Consultors, if he had been about to proceed as a private Doctor.
96. Secundum, quod venit ponderandum est, eo animo Alexandrum, Decretum edidisse, ut Oves sibi creditas ab spatiosa, lataque per quam itur ad perditionem via, pro Pastoralis solitudine, in rectam semitam evocaret. Quæ, certe Decreti clausula, evidentissime demonstrat processisse		96. The second thing that comes to be weighed is that Alexander published the Decree with this mind, that he might, out of his Pastoral solicitude, call back the Sheep committed to him from the spacious and broad way, by which one goes to perdition, into the right path. Which clause of the Decree most evidently demonstrates that its Framer proceeded, not as

Latin		English
illius Conditozem, non ut personam privatam, & ut Doctorem particularem, sed uti Universalem Ecclesiæ Doctorem, & Pastorem: qua tali enim creditæ sunt à Christo Oves ejus Petro, & in Petro, Alexandro, & non qua Fabio Ghisio.		a private person and as a particular Doctor, but as universal Doctor and Pastor of the Church: for as such were his Sheep committed by Christ to Peter, and in Peter to Alexander, and not as to Fabio Chigi.
97. Et denique eadem veritas demonstratur, ex utriusque Decreti fine: Statuit (utrobique dicitur,) & decrevit, prædictas propositiones, & unamquamque ipsarum, ut minimum, tanquam scandalosas esse damnandas, & prohibendas, sicut eas damnat, & prohibet, ita, ut quicumque illas, aut conjunctim, aut divisim docuerit, defenderit, ediderit, aut de eis, etiam disputative, publice, aut privatim tractaverit, nisi forsitan impugnando, ipso facto incidat in Excommunicationem, à qua non possit (præterquam in articulo mortis) ab alio quacumque etiam dignitate fulgente, nisi a pro tempore existente Romano Pontifice, absolvi. Insuper districte in virtute Sanctæ Obedientiæ, & sub interminatione divini Judicii prohibet omnibus Christi fidelibus, cujuscumque conditionis, dignitatis, ac status, etiam specialissima nota dignis, ne prædictas opiniones, aut aliquam ipsarum ad praxim deducant. Demonstratur itaque ex his Decretorum finibus, Alexandrum Septimum, qua Summum Pontificem processisse, quia qua persona particularis non posset damnare, & prohibere opiniones illas, maxime omnibus Christi fidelibus cujuscumque conditionis, dignitatis, ac status, & multo minus, illos præcepto formali, & excommunicationi Sedi Apostolicæ reservatæ, subicere.		97. And finally the same truth is demonstrated from the ending of each Decree: He has established (it is said in both places) and decreed that the aforesaid propositions, and each one of them, are, at the least, to be condemned and prohibited as scandalous, even as he does condemn and prohibit them; so that whosoever shall have taught, defended, or published them, either conjointly or severally, or shall have treated of them, even disputatively, publicly or privately, unless perchance by way of impugning them, shall ipso facto incur Excommunication, from which he cannot (except at the point of death) be absolved by any other, however resplendent with dignity, save by the Roman Pontiff existing for the time being. Moreover he strictly, in virtue of Holy Obedience, and under the threat of the divine Judgment, forbids all the faithful of Christ, of whatsoever condition, dignity, and state, even such as are worthy of most special note, to reduce the aforesaid opinions, or any of them, to practice. It is demonstrated, therefore, from these endings of the Decrees, that Alexander the Seventh proceeded as Supreme Pontiff, because as a particular person he could not condemn and prohibit those opinions, especially [not] to all the faithful of Christ of whatsoever condition, dignity, and state, and much less subject them to a formal precept, and to an excommunication reserved to the Apostolic See.
98. Pro nobis est Joannes de Cardenas, in Crisi Theologica, parte 1. tractatu 1. disputat. 9. capit. 20. articulo 3. ubi dicto, Romanum Pontificem loqui ex Cathedra, docere Ecclesiam, loqui Ecclesiæ, & loqui ut Caput Ecclesiæ, esse quatuor omnino synonyma, & ejusdem prorsus significationis; ait: Sed quid est Pontificem loqui ex Cathedra, & ut Caput Ecclesiæ? Optime explicuit P.		98. For us is John de Cardenas, in Crisi Theologica, parte 1. tractatu 1. disputat. 9. capit. 20. articulo 3., where, having said that for the Roman Pontiff to speak ex Cathedra, to teach the Church, to speak to the Church, and to speak as Head of the Church, are altogether four synonyms, and of entirely the same signification, he says: But what is it for the Pontiff to speak ex Cathedra, and as Head of the Church? Fr. Valentia excellently explained

Latin		English
Valentia, 2. 2. puncto 7. §. 39. inquires: Tunc vere definire Summum Pontificem, ut Ecclesiæ Caput, quando Decretum ederet pro universa Ecclesia, quodque vellet à fidelibus indubitanter admitti, quod idem tradit P. Suarez, contra Regem Angliæ, libro 1. capite 6. numero 15. & 16. & P. Granado, 2. 2. controvers. 1. tractat. 7. disputat. 2. sect. 1. numero 1. & communiter Doctores.		it, 2. 2. puncto 7. §. 39., saying: That the Supreme Pontiff then truly defines, as Head of the Church, when he should issue a Decree for the universal Church, and one which he should will to be by the faithful indubitably admitted; which the same is handed down by Fr. Suarez, contra Regem Angliæ, libro 1. capite 6. numero 15. & 16., and Fr. Granado, 2. 2. controvers. 1. tractat. 7. disputat. 2. sect. 1. numero 1., and commonly the Doctors.
99. Et statim prosequitur Cardenas, dicendo: Hinc manifeste patet hoc Decretum, esse Alexandri VII. loquentis ex Cathedra, docentis Ecclesiam, & ut capitis Ecclesiæ. Primo. Quia præcepit hoc Decretum publicari suo Nomine, sicut cæteræ leges universales promulgantur.		99. And Cardenas at once pursues, saying: Hence it manifestly appears that this Decree is of Alexander VII speaking ex Cathedra, teaching the Church, and as Head of the Church. First. Because he commanded this Decree to be published in his own Name, just as the other universal laws are promulgated.
100. Secundo. Tunc enim decernit ut caput Ecclesiæ; quando Decretum edit, pro universa Ecclesia, illudque vult ab omnibus fidelibus indubitanter admitti: atqui sic edidit Decretum hoc: Ergo in eo loquitur ex cathedra, & ut caput Ecclesiæ. Minor patet, nam in ultima periodo dicitur: In Virtute sanctæ obedientiæ, & sub interminatione divini Judicii prohibet omnibus Christi Fidelibus, cujuscumque conditionis, dignitatis, ac status, etiam specialissima nota dignis, &c. Item constat ex præmio, ubi dicitur perniciem ex prædictis propositionibus esse universalem, ibi: ingens irruptura esset Christianæ vitæ corruptela. Et requiri etiam remedium universale pro omnibus ovibus sibi commissis, illis verbis: Ut oves sibi creditas ab ejusmodi spatiosa, lataque, per quam itur ad perditionem, via, pro Pastoralis solitudine, in rectam semitam evocaret.		100. Secondly. For he then decrees as Head of the Church, when he issues a Decree for the universal Church, and wills it to be indubitably admitted by all the faithful: but thus he issued this Decree: Therefore in it he speaks ex Cathedra, and as Head of the Church. The minor is plain, for in the last period it is said: In virtue of holy obedience, and under the threat of the divine Judgment, he forbids all the faithful of Christ, of whatsoever condition, dignity, and state, even such as are worthy of most special note, &c. Likewise it is established from the proem, where the ruin arising from the aforesaid propositions is said to be universal, there: an immense corruption of Christian life would burst in. And that a universal remedy also is required for all the sheep committed to him, in those words: That he might, out of his Pastoral solicitude, call back the sheep entrusted to him from this sort of spacious and broad way, by which one goes to perdition, into the right path.
101. Quando autem obiter, & per transennam Pontifex aliquid decernit, etiam in Materia Fidei, & morum, non tunc loquitur ex Cathedra, neque decernit ut Caput Ecclesiæ. Patet. Quia id quia ita loquitur Pontifex, non intendit à fidelibus indubitanter admitti. Ideo, cum Nicolaus I. cap. A quodam Judæo, de Consecration. distantia 4. dixit		101. But when the Pontiff decrees something incidentally, and in passing, even in matter of Faith and of morals, he does not then speak ex Cathedra, nor decree as Head of the Church. It is plain. Because that which the Pontiff so speaks, he does not intend to be indubitably admitted by the faithful. Therefore, when Nicholas I, cap. A quodam Judæo, de Consecration. distantia 4., said that Baptism

Latin		English
Baptismum in nomine Christi collatum valere; id quidem non dixit ut Caput Ecclesiæ, quia id dixit obiter, & pe transennam, cum solum assumpsisset definiendum, An Baptismus à Judæo collatus, sit validus. Omnia prædicta P. Cardenas.		conferred in the name of Christ is valid, he did not indeed say this as Head of the Church, because he said it incidentally and in passing, since he had taken up for defining only whether Baptism conferred by a Jew is valid. All the aforesaid, Fr. Cardenas.
102. Secundo probatur nostra principalis conclusio. Absque errore in Fide, negari non potest, quod verus, & legitimus Romanus Pontifex Petri successor, in Petro fuerit institutus à Christo, Pastor, & Doctor totius Ecclesiæ Catholicæ, Joannis ultimo dicente: Pasce oves meas: nec quod tota Ecclesia illum audire, & sequi teneatur, ut bene ex illo infert Bellarminus, lib. 1. supra cit. numero 33. & lib. 4. capite 2. versic. Deinde, & capite 5. vers. Ac ut rem, & Suarez, de Fide, disputat. 5. sect. 8. numero 9. supra etiam, numero 13. & 67. recensiti. Si autem Pontifex erraret, falsam doctrinam tradendo, aut veram prohibendo, etiam in rebus moralibus, erraret etiam Ecclesia tota, illum audiendo, & sequendo. Sed hoc non est dicendum, cum Fidei adversetur, & promissioni Christi, Joannis 16. ibi: Cum venerit ille Spiritus veritatis, docebit vos omnem veritatem: Et cum Ecclesia sit columna veritatis. Ergo cum omnino certum debeat esse Pontificem Alexandrum Septimum errare non potuisse in damnatione, & prohibitione dictarum propositionum moralium, tenendum est tanquam omnino certum, quin remaneat locus interno, aut externo dubio, tales propositiones, vere esse scandalosas, & prohibitas.		102. Secondly our principal conclusion is proved. Without error in Faith it cannot be denied that the true and legitimate Roman Pontiff, successor of Peter, was instituted in Peter by Christ as Pastor and Doctor of the whole Catholic Church, Joannis ultimo saying: Feed my sheep; nor that the whole Church is bound to hear and to follow him, as Bellarmine well infers from that place, lib. 1. supra cit. numero 33. & lib. 4. capite 2. versic. Deinde, & capite 5. vers. Ac ut rem, and Suarez, de Fide, disputat. 5. sect. 8. numero 9., recounted also above, numero 13. & 67. But if the Pontiff should err, by handing on a false doctrine, or by prohibiting a true one, even in moral matters, the whole Church too would err, in hearing and following him. But this is not to be said, since it is opposed to Faith, and to the promise of Christ, Joannis 16., there: When that Spirit of truth shall come, he will teach you all truth; and since the Church is the pillar of truth. Therefore, since it must be altogether certain that Pope Alexander the Seventh could not err in the condemnation and prohibition of the said moral propositions, it is to be held as altogether certain — so that no room remains for internal or external doubt — that such propositions are truly scandalous and prohibited.
103. Tertio probatur ratione, qua utitur Suarez, tomo 4. de Relig. lib. 3. capite 4. Corollar. 2. ad probandum admissionem Scholasticorum in Societatem Jesu, constituere illos, in vero, & proprio Religioso statu, supposita duplici Constitutione Gregorii XIII. Quanto fructuosius, & Ascendente Domino, sic ait: Secundo infertur ex dictis, quam sit certa veritas à Pontifice declarata. (In duplici recensita Constitutione.)		103. Thirdly it is proved by the reason which Suarez uses, tomo 4. de Relig. lib. 3. capite 4. Corollar. 2., for proving that the admission of Scholastics into the Society of Jesus constitutes them in a true and proper Religious state, the twofold Constitution of Gregory XIII, Quanto fructuosius and Ascendente Domino, being supposed; thus he says: Secondly it is inferred from what has been said how certain is the truth declared by the Pontiff. (In the twofold Constitution recounted.) For I judge it to be

Latin		English
Existimo enim esse omnino infalibilem, ita ut sine errore in Fide, negari non possit. Ratio est, (hanc pro mea adduco conclusionem) quia sententia Pontificis in his, quæ ad doctrinam pertinent, infalibilem continet certitudinem ex Christi institutione, & promissione: Ego rogavi pro te: ut non deficiat fides tua, & tu aliquando conversus confirma fratres tuos. Lucæ 22. & Mathæi 16. Tu es Petrus, & super hanc petram ædificabo Ecclesiam meam, & portæ inferi non prævalebunt adversus eam. Et concessio facta est, Joannis 21. Pasce oves meas. Quæ testimonia ita sunt ab Ecclesia intellecta, & perpetua traditione, ac Patrum, Conciliorum, & ipsorum Pontificum definitione firmata, ac declarata. (Reliqua vide supra numero 71.) Valde autem diminuta fuisset Christi Domini providentia circa suam Ecclesiam, si in decidendis talibus quæstionibus ex Cathedra, Vicarium labi permetteret. Hæc P. Suarez. Ex quibus bene sequitur, omnino certum debere esse propositiones ab Alexandro Septimo damnatas, & prohibitas tanquam scandalosas, vere tales esse. Alias sententia Pontificis, in his, quæ ad mores, quæ ad doctrinam pertinent, infalibilem certitudinem non haberet, nec contineret; quod esset contra institutionem, promissionem, & concessionem Christi, & contra traditionem Ecclesiæ, & Definitiones Patrum, Conciliorum, & Summorum Pontificum. Ergo omnino certum debet esse, propositiones damnatas tanquam scandalosas, ab Alexandro Septimo, vere tales esse.		altogether infallible, so that it cannot be denied without error in Faith. The reason is (this I adduce for my own conclusion) because the sentence of the Pontiff, in those things which pertain to doctrine, contains an infallible certitude from the institution and promise of Christ: I have prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not; and thou, being once converted, confirm thy brethren. Lucæ 22. & Mathæi 16. Thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my Church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against her. And the concession was made, Joannis 21. Feed my sheep. Which testimonies have been so understood by the Church, and confirmed and declared by perpetual tradition, and by the definition of the Fathers, of the Councils, and of the Pontiffs themselves. (For the rest see supra numero 71.) But greatly diminished would the providence of Christ the Lord concerning his Church have been, if in deciding such questions ex Cathedra he should permit his Vicar to fall. Thus Fr. Suarez. From which it well follows that it must be altogether certain that the propositions condemned and prohibited by Alexander the Seventh as scandalous are truly such. Otherwise the sentence of the Pontiff, in those things which pertain to morals, which pertain to doctrine, would neither have nor contain an infallible certitude; which would be against the institution, the promise, and the concession of Christ, and against the tradition of the Church, and the Definitions of the Fathers, of the Councils, and of the Supreme Pontiffs. Therefore it must be altogether certain that the propositions condemned as scandalous by Alexander the Seventh are truly such.
104. Confirmat Suarez assumptum suum, de eo, quod Scholares Societatis suæ, sint veri Religiosi, & quod id, sine errore in Fide negari non possit, ex doctrina Theologorum omnium, omniumque Catholicorum, qui pro certo habent, Summum Pontificem, non posse errare in doctrina morum Ecclesiæ tradenda (verba ejus reddo:) nam hæc doctrina multum pertinet ad bonos mores, & ex opposito, multa inferri		104. Suarez confirms his assumption, concerning the fact that the Scholars of his Society are true Religious, and that this cannot be denied without error in Faith, from the doctrine of all Theologians, and of all Catholics, who hold it for certain that the Supreme Pontiff cannot err in handing on to the Church the doctrine of morals (I render his words): for this doctrine pertains much to good morals, and from the opposite many absurd and scandalous things could be inferred in the

Latin		English
possunt absurda, & scandalosa in Ecclesia, & è converso, si hæc declaratio Pontificis falsa esse posset, ex illa multa absurda: & contra bonos mores sequerentur; ut quod status Religiosus commutaretur in non Religiosum, & quod votum Religionis impleretur sine statu Religioso. Et similia. Ita Suarez. Si ergo omnes Theologi, & Catholici, pro certo habent Summum Pontificem errare non posse, in doctrina morum Ecclesiæ tradenda, & doctrina tradita à Gregorio XIII. de eo, quod Scholares Societatis, veri sint Religiosi, multum pertinet ad bonos mores, & ex opposita multa sequerentur contra bonos mores absurda, si doctrina Gregorii falsa esse posset, quare idem dici non debet, si doctrina Alexandri in duplici Decreto nostro tradita, falsa esse posset? Nonne multum pertinet ad bonos mores, quod homo aliquo tempore vitæ suæ actus Fidei, Spei, & Charitatis eliciat? Quod vir Equestris provocatus, duellum non acceptet, ne notam apud alios incurrat timiditatis? & sic de aliis propositionibus damnatis discurrendo: Nonne ex oppositis sequentur multa contra bonos mores absurda? Ergo omnino certum debet esse, propositiones damnatas ab Alexandro Septimo tanquam scandalosas, vere scandalosas esse, damnatas, & prohibitas.		Church; and conversely, if this declaration of the Pontiff could be false, from it many absurdities, and things against good morals, would follow: as that the Religious state would be changed into a non-Religious one, and that the vow of Religion would be fulfilled without the Religious state. And the like. Thus Suarez. If therefore all Theologians and Catholics hold it for certain that the Supreme Pontiff cannot err in handing on to the Church the doctrine of morals, and the doctrine handed on by Gregory XIII, concerning the fact that the Scholars of the Society are true Religious, pertains much to good morals, and from the opposite many absurdities against good morals would follow if the doctrine of Gregory could be false — why ought not the same to be said, if the doctrine handed on by Alexander in our twofold Decree could be false? Does it not pertain much to good morals that a man should at some time of his life elicit acts of Faith, Hope, and Charity? That a Knight, being challenged, should not accept a duel, lest he incur among others the mark of timidity? And so running through the other condemned propositions: Would not many absurdities against good morals follow from the opposites? Therefore it must be altogether certain that the propositions condemned by Alexander the Seventh as scandalous are truly scandalous, condemned, and prohibited.
105. Pro nostra conclusione adsunt plures alii gravissimi Authores, quorum aliquos, & eorum doctrinas libet pro illius corroboracione, & majore dilucidatione producere; & tradere. In primis enim Joannes Ægidius Trullench. tomo 1. libro 1. in Decalog. capite 2. dubio 4. numero 18. post alia, scripsit: Ex quo fit, si Ecclesia definit aliquam propositionem hæreticam, aut temerariam, aut scandalosam esse, credo de Fide, tali censura esse dignam: quia alias obligaremur fateri Ecclesiam errare posse, in his, quæ ad Fidem pertinent, contra Paulum ad Thimot. 3. dicentem, Ecclesiam esse columnam, & firmamentum veritatis.		105. For our conclusion there are present several other most grave Authors, some of whom, and their doctrines, it is well to produce and hand on for its corroboration and greater elucidation. For in the first place John Giles Trullench, tomo 1. libro 1. in Decalog. capite 2. dubio 4. numero 18., after other things, wrote: From which it comes about that, if the Church defines some proposition to be heretical, or rash, or scandalous, I believe it to be of Faith that it is worthy of such a censure: because otherwise we should be obliged to confess that the Church can err in those things which pertain to Faith, against Paul ad Thimot. 3., saying that the Church is the pillar and ground of truth.

Latin		English
106. Manuel Ambrosio de Filguera, Clerigo Menor, en la Casos de Consciencia, tratado 13. de la Descommunion, cap. 1. despues de haver puesto en el articulo septimo los dichos Decretos de Alexandro Septimo, en el articulo octavo propone, y resuelve algunas dudas acerca de ellos. La ultima es tel tenor siguiente.		106. Manuel Ambrose de Filguera, Clerk Minor, en la Casos de Consciencia, tratado 13. de la Descommunion, cap. 1., after having set down in the seventh article the said Decrees of Alexander the Seventh, in the eighth article proposes and resolves certain doubts concerning them. The last is of the following tenor.
La sexta duda es, si pudo errar Alexandro Septimo, condenando por escandalosas, las dichas quarenta, y cinco opiniones morales, o mandando, que no se ponganen practica; que es le mismo, que preguntar, si puede el Summo Pontifice errar, poniendo leyes pertenecientes alas costumbres. Respondo, que no puede errar. Enseñan esta resolucion como de Fe, San Antonino, 3. par tit. 12. cap. 2. §. 2. Sylvestro, Fides, numero 2. Castro Palao, tomo 1. tractatu 4. disputatione 1. pun. 5. §. 3. numero 4. y otros, que defienden lo mismo, diziendo, que dista poco de la Fe, como Cano, cap. citato (esto es, libro 5. de Locis Theologicis, cap. 5.) y otros que refiere el Mo. Joan de Santo Thoma, 2. 2. disputatione 9. artic. 3. Porque es de fe, que no puede errar el Summo Pontifice en apacentar alos Fides, que son sus ovezas. Pues los Fieles, no solo son apacentados con la doctrina de la Fe, sino tambien con la honestidad de costumbres saludables, que es loque Christo mando à San Pedro, y sus successores; Luego es de fe, o dista poco de ella nuestra resolucion. Y assi el Pontifice no puede errar mandando alguna cosa contraria a la ley Divina, o natural. De que se infiere consiguiente mente, que Alexandro Septimo, no pudo errar, mandando que no se pusiessen en practica, dichas quarenta, y cinco opiniones morales.		The sixth doubt is whether Alexander the Seventh could err in condemning as scandalous the said forty-five moral opinions, or in commanding that they be not reduced to practice; which is the same as to ask whether the Supreme Pontiff can err in laying down laws pertaining to morals. I answer that he cannot err. This resolution is taught as of Faith by St. Antoninus, 3. par tit. 12. cap. 2. §. 2., Sylvester, Fides, numero 2., Castro Palao, tomo 1. tractatu 4. disputatione 1. pun. 5. §. 3. numero 4., and others who defend the same, saying that it is little removed from Faith, as Cano, cap. citato (that is, libro 5. de Locis Theologicis, cap. 5.), and others whom Master John of St. Thomas reports, 2. 2. disputatione 9. artic. 3. For it is of faith that the Supreme Pontiff cannot err in feeding the Faithful, who are his sheep. Now the Faithful are fed not only with the doctrine of Faith, but also with the honesty of wholesome morals, which is what Christ commanded to St. Peter and his successors; therefore our resolution is of faith, or is little removed from it. And thus the Pontiff cannot err in commanding anything contrary to the Divine or natural law. From which it is consequently inferred that Alexander the Seventh could not err in commanding that the said forty-five moral opinions should not be reduced to practice.
107. Pater Joannes de Cardenas, in Crisi Theologica, tomo 1. disputatione 9. cap. 20. articulo 6. in specie etiam nostri casus, Decretorum Alexandri Septimi, inquisito, An hæc Decreta sint Definitiones Pontificiæ? supponit,		107. Father John de Cardenas, in Crisi Theologica, tomo 1. disputatione 9. cap. 20. articulo 6., in the very kind of our case also, that of the Decrees of Alexander the Seventh, having inquired whether these Decrees are Pontifical Definitions, supposes that the word

Latin		English
vocem Definitio, dupliciter usurpari. Primo, pro decisione, seu declaratione articuli Fidei. Secundo, pro qualibet decisione, seu declaratione Pontificis, quam tradit ut omnino certam, & indubitabilem. In qua acceptione ait, numer. 351. cum Pontifex summus aliquid in materia doctrinæ decedit, ut certum, & absque periculo errandi, dicitur id definire. Nam definire, & pro certo decidere, idem sunt. Quo supposito, numero 353. ait: Itaque dum Romanus Pontifex docet Ecclesiam aliquid in quo errare non potest, id quidem docet, tanquam omnino certum, ut ex terminis notum est. Quod autem docet, ut omnino certum, id expresse definit, & si non definiat tanquam articulum Fidei: Definire enim, vel decidere, est rem tanquam omnino certam declarare. Sunt enim multa omnino certa, in quibus Pontifex errare non possit, quamvis non perveniant ad certitudinem Fidei. Hæc ibi dictus Author, & statim proseguitur, in numeris sequentibus.		Definition is used in two ways. First, for the decision or declaration of an article of Faith. Secondly, for any decision or declaration whatsoever of the Pontiff which he hands on as altogether certain and indubitable. In which acceptation he says, numer. 351., that when the Supreme Pontiff decides something in matter of doctrine as certain and without danger of erring, he is said to define it. For to define, and to decide for certain, are the same. Which being supposed, numero 353., he says: And so, while the Roman Pontiff teaches the Church something in which he cannot err, he teaches it indeed as altogether certain, as is known from the terms. But what he teaches as altogether certain, that he expressly defines, even if he does not define it as an article of Faith: for to define, or to decide, is to declare a thing as altogether certain. For there are many things altogether certain in which the Pontiff cannot err, although they do not attain to the certitude of Faith. Thus there the said Author, and he at once pursues, in the following numbers.
108. His positis, dicendum est, hæc Decreta, esse definitiones Pontificis, secundo modo. Constat. Illud enim Pontifex definit secundo modo, quando aliquid declarat, vel affirmat pro certo in materia, in qua errare non potest: Sed Alexander Septimus affirmat pro certo, eas propositiones esse scandalosas in materia in qua errare non potest. Ergo in illo Decreto Pontifex vere definit. Consequentia est legitima. Major constat ex dictis numer. 351. Minor etiam patet, quia affirmat eas propositiones esse scandalosas, cum tamen illæ versentur in materia morum: in qua Romanum Pontificem Ecclesiæ loquentem, errare non posse, constat ex capite sexto.		108. These things being laid down, it must be said that these Decrees are definitions of the Pontiff in the second mode. It is evident. For the Pontiff defines in the second mode when he declares or affirms something for certain in a matter in which he cannot err: But Alexander the Seventh affirms for certain that those propositions are scandalous, in a matter in which he cannot err. Therefore in that Decree the Pontiff truly defines. The consequence is legitimate. The major is established from the things said numer. 351. The minor also is plain, because he affirms those propositions to be scandalous, whereas they are nevertheless engaged in matter of morals: in which that the Roman Pontiff, speaking to the Church, cannot err, is established from the sixth chapter.
109. Confirmatur. Nam ut constat ex numero 352. Decretum Clementis Octavi, quo affirmavit, opinionem de absolutione inter Absentes, esse falsam, temerariam, & scandalosam, fuit Definitio Romanæ Cathedræ, quia illud pro certo decedit: Ergo cum Alexander		109. It is confirmed. For, as is established from numero 352., the Decree of Clement the Eighth, by which he affirmed the opinion concerning absolution between those Absent to be false, rash, and scandalous, was a Definition of the Roman Chair, because he decided it for certain: Therefore, since Alexander the Seventh decides

Latin		English
Septimus pro certo decimat eas propositiones à se damnatas, esse scandalosas, dicendum est, eam esse definitionem.		for certain that those propositions condemned by him are scandalous, it must be said that this is a definition.
110. Nec valet si dicas, ad definitionem formalem, requiri, quid Pontifex dicat, Definimus, decidimus, declaramus , vel quid simile. Nam verbum Damnamus , in materia doctrinæ, in qua Pontifex errare non potest, est verbum simile, & æquivalens. Nam, hoc, quod est damnare doctrinam tanquam certo scandalosam, idem est quod decidere, & declarare, eam scandalosam esse.		110. Nor is it of avail if you say that for a formal definition it is required that the Pontiff say, We define, we decide, we declare , or something similar. For the word We condemn , in matter of doctrine in which the Pontiff cannot err, is a similar and equivalent word. For this — to condemn a doctrine as certainly scandalous — is the same as to decide and declare that it is scandalous.
111. Hactenus Pater Cardenas, dicto cap. 20. art. 6. postquam c. 6. art. 1. ejusdem Disputat. 9. dixerat, & latissima probaverat ibi, & in sequentibus articulis, demonstrationibus esse, certissimum inter Catholicos Doctores, Romanum Pontificem errare non posse in materia morum.		111. Thus far Father Cardenas, dicto cap. 20. art. 6. , after he had said, c. 6. art. 1. ejusdem Disputat. 9. , and had there most amply proved, and in the following articles by demonstrations, that it is most certain among Catholic Doctors that the Roman Pontiff cannot err in matter of morals.
112. Ad meum intentum, & meæ conclusionis probationem adducit præfatus Pater Cardenas, eodem articulo 1. capit. 6. Sylvestrum, in Summa, verbo Fides, numero 2. dicentem: Ad fidem pertinet inhærere determinationi Pontificis Summi, in his, quæ sunt Fidei; imo etiam in his, quæ spectant ad bonos mores: quia in hujusmodi etiam Ecclesia errare non potest, & consequenter nec Caput ejus, in quantum caput, sive in quantum Pontifex.		112. For my purpose, and for the proof of my conclusion, the aforesaid Father Cardenas adduces, in the same article 1, chapter 6, Sylvester, in Summa, verbo Fides, numero 2. , saying: It pertains to faith to adhere to the determination of the Supreme Pontiff in those things which are of Faith; nay, even in those which regard good morals: because in matters of this kind also the Church cannot err, and consequently neither can her Head, inasmuch as he is head, or inasmuch as he is Pontiff.
113. Adducit etiam Ferdinandum Castrum Palaum, tomo 1. tract. 4. disp. 1. pun. 5. §. 3. n. 4. docentem esse de Fide, non posse Romanum Pontificem errare, statuendo aliquid à tota Ecclesia observandum, quod legi divinæ, vel naturali contrarium sit. Et tenet etiam (addit) id esse de Fide, loquendo de lege, seu Constitutione lata pro una Provincia, cum Magistro Bannez, 2. 2. quæst. 1. artic. 16. dubio 6. conclus. 4.		113. He also adduces Ferdinand Castro Palao, tomo 1. tract. 4. disp. 1. pun. 5. §. 3. n. 4. , teaching that it is of Faith that the Roman Pontiff cannot err in establishing something to be observed by the whole Church which is contrary to the divine or natural law. And he holds also (he adds) that this is of Faith, speaking of a law or Constitution enacted for one Province, with Master Bannez, 2. 2. quæst. 1. artic. 16. dubio 6. conclus. 4.
114. Ob hanc rationem, certum omnino esse (inquit Pater Cardenas) quod Romanus Pontifex errare non possit in approbatione Religionum, quantum ad		114. For this reason, that it is altogether certain (says Father Cardenas) that the Roman Pontiff cannot err in the approbation of Religious Orders, as regards their Constitutions and laws,

Latin		English
Constitutiones, & leges earum, ad honestatem, & bonitatem moralem earum, affirmat Sanctus Thomas, Opusculo 19. capite 4. & Bannez, 2. 2. quæstione prima, articulo 10. dubio octavo, conclusione quarta, & oppositam conclusionem dicit esse hæreticam. Et pro eo, quod sit de Fide, refert Palaum, loco citato, §. 6. numero secundo. Dianam, tractatu de Infalibilitate Decretorum Pontificis parte undecima, resolutione 25. & apud eum, Amicum, tomo 4. disputatione 7. sectione 3. numero 79. & Franciscum del Castillo, tomo 2. in 3. Sententiarum, disputatione 16. quæstione nona, numero 8. qui tres dicunt, id esse de Fide.		as regards their moral honesty and goodness, St. Thomas affirms, Opusculo 19. capite 4., and Bannez, 2. 2. quæstione prima, articulo 10. dubio octavo, conclusione quarta, and he says the opposite conclusion to be heretical. And for the fact that it is of Faith he reports Palao, loco citato, §. 6. numero secundo, Diana, tractatu de Infalibilitate Decretorum Pontificis parte undecima, resolutione 25., and in him, Amico, tomo 4. disputatione 7. sectione 3. numero 79., and Francis del Castillo, tomo 2. in 3. Sententiarum, disputatione 16. quæstione nona, numero 8., which three say that it is of Faith.
115. Ubi notabis primo, dum Authores dicunt Pontificem errare non posse in materia Fidei, & morum, condistinguere materiam morum à materia Fidei: & ideo non solum errare non posse in materia morum: quando hanc materiam tradit, definiendo esse de Fide, sed etiam quando materiam morum docet, etiam absque definitione articuli Fidei.		115. Where you will note first, that while the Authors say that the Pontiff cannot err in matter of Faith and of morals, they distinguish matter of morals from matter of Faith: and therefore he cannot err in matter of morals, not only when he hands on this matter by defining it to be of Faith, but also when he teaches matter of morals even without the definition of an article of Faith.
116. Hinc patet, pro hac assertionem stare Caramuelem, in Theologia Fundamentali, numero 161. fundamento tertio. Nam numero 160. pro fundamento, cum statuisset hanc propositionem: Vera Ecclesia in substantialibus articulis errare non potest: prædicto numero 161. declarat, quinam sint substantiales articuli: aitque, accidentales eos esse, qui nec mores, nec Fidem concernerent. Ex quo patet substantiales, in quibus errare non potest, esse, non solum articulos Fidei, sed etiam morum, absque definitione Fidei traditos. (Ergo debet certum omnino esse; Summum Pontificem in substantialibus, qualia sunt, quæ continenter in prædicta Alexandri Septimi damnatione, errare non posse: concernunt enim omnia illa ad mores.)		116. Hence it is plain that Caramuel stands for this assertion, in Theologia Fundamentali, numero 161. fundamento tertio. For numero 160., for a foundation, when he had laid down this proposition: The true Church cannot err in substantial articles, in the aforesaid numero 161. he declares which are the substantial articles: and he says that those are accidental which concern neither morals nor Faith. From which it is plain that the substantial ones, in which she cannot err, are not only the articles of Faith, but also those of morals, handed on without a definition of Faith. (Therefore it must be altogether certain that the Supreme Pontiff cannot err in substantial matters, such as are those which are contained in the aforesaid condemnation of Alexander the Seventh: for all those concern morals.)
117. Notabis secundo, prædictos Authores non solum pro certo affirmare, non posse errare Romanum Pontificem		117. You will note secondly, that the aforesaid Authors not only affirm for certain that the Roman Pontiff cannot err in those things which in iis, quæ præcipit, nempe præcipiendo turpia, vel prohibendo honesta, sed etiam nec errare posse, dum expresso iudicio approbat, vel reprobatur mores, ita ut approbet vitia, vel actus virtutis condemnet. Omnia prædicta dicit Pater Cardenas. in prædicto articulo 1.		he commands, namely by commanding base things, or by prohibiting honest ones, but also that he cannot err while by an express judgment he approves or reprobates morals, so as to approve vices, or condemn acts of virtue. All the aforesaid Father Cardenas says, in prædicto articulo 1.

Latin		English
118. Antoninus Diana Coordinatus, tomo nono, tractatu quinto de Infalibilitate Decretorum Romani Pontificis extra Concilium, resolutione decima , & parte ii quærit; An quando Pontifex definit aliquam propositionem esse temerariam, erroneam, scandalosam, &c. sit hæreticus, qui pertinaciter negaret illam esse talem? An vero, solum sit temerarium, erroneum, scandalosum, &c? Et respondet. Aliqui affirmant esse hæreticum, id negare: quia Pontifici revelatur id, quod definit; ac proinde, qui pertinaciter negat, quod Pontifex definit, negat objectum revelatum, & in hæresim incidit.		118. Antoninus Diana Coordinatus, tomo nono, tractatu quinto de Infalibilitate Decretorum Romani Pontificis extra Concilium, resolutione decima , and in part 11, asks whether, when the Pontiff defines some proposition to be rash, erroneous, scandalous, etc., he is a heretic who should pertinaciously deny it to be such? Or whether it is only rash, erroneous, scandalous, etc.? And he answers. Some affirm it to be heretical to deny this: because that which he defines is revealed to the Pontiff; and accordingly, he who pertinaciously denies what the Pontiff defines, denies a revealed object, and falls into heresy.
119. Sed ad propositam quæstionem (prosequitur Doctor ille,) sic respondet Turrianus, in 2. 2. tomo primo, disputatione 55. dubio quinto : Constat sæpe Pontificem Summum damnare aliquam propositionem ut hæreticam, aut tanquam erroneam, vel temerariam; aliquando declarat propositionem esse de Fide; interdum probabilem. Vocamus ergo in quæstionem, An in his censuris assignandis, possit Ecclesia errare; constat autem ex dictis, ad quæstionem primam Pontificem non posse errare in definitionibus Fidei; quærimus ergo, an possit errare assignando alias censuras?		119. But to the proposed question (that Doctor pursues) Turrianus thus answers, in 2. 2. tomo primo, disputatione 55. dubio quinto : It is evident that the Supreme Pontiff often condemns some proposition as heretical, or as erroneous, or rash; sometimes he declares a proposition to be of Faith; sometimes probable. We call in question, therefore, whether in assigning these censures the Church can err; but it is established from the things said to the first question that the Pontiff cannot err in definitions of Faith; we ask, therefore, whether he can err in assigning other censures?
120. Mihi sane valde certum est, Pontificem non posse errare in his censuris; nam certum est in definiendis articulis Fidei, veritatibus, non posse errare, ut dixi; assignare vero has censuras, pertinet ad veritates Fidei. Ergo nullo modo admittendum est posse errare. Et explicatur, quia cum declarat aliquam propositionem esse erroneam, plane definitio pertinet proxime ad Fidei veritates, quia propositio erronea est contraria conclusioni deductæ evidenter		120. To me indeed it is very certain that the Pontiff cannot err in these censures; for it is certain that in defining the articles of Faith, [and] truths, he cannot err, as I have said; but to assign these censures pertains to the truths of Faith. Therefore it is in no way to be admitted that he can err. And it is explained: because when he declares some proposition to be erroneous, plainly the definition pertains proximately to the truths of Faith, since an erroneous proposition is contrary to a conclusion evidently deduced from the ex principiis Fidei: Ergo non posset Pontifex errare in hac censura, nisi errans aliquo modo circa Fidei veritates. Et idem iudicium est, si declaret aliquam propositionem, esse proximam errori, vel sapientem hæresim.		principles of Faith: Therefore the Pontiff could not err in this censure, unless erring in some way concerning the truths of Faith. And the same judgment holds if he should declare some proposition to be next to error, or savoring of heresy.

Latin		English
121. Deinde in aliis censuris propositionum, quæ non ita proxime videntur pertinere ad doctrinam Fidei, ut cum dicitur aliqua propositio temeraria, etiam dicendum est, errare non posse Pontificem: quia pertinet ad doctrinam, & veritatem rerum Religionis Christianæ: quod si in hoc posset errare, non esset omnino certa definitio circa veritatem Fidei, quia posset contingere, ut damnaret aliquam propositionem temerariam, quæ esset magis consentanea principiis Fidei, quam contraria, quod nullo modo est admittendum. Et ita existimo esse errorem, asserere in his Censuris posse Pontificem errare. Ita Turrianus, qui in censura Theologica, quæ adest in tomo Selectarum Disputationum, in Centuria prima, dubio 56. quæsito, An mereatur censuram asserere, Pontificem posse errare circa censuras propositionum: Respondet, certum esse Pontificem, non posse errare in assignando censuram alicujus propositionis, quia in rebus pertinentibus ad doctrinam, non potest errare, & oppositum asserere, est impium, scandalosum, temerarium, & erroneum.		121. Then, in the other censures of propositions, which do not seem to pertain so proximately to the doctrine of Faith — as when some proposition is called rash — it must also be said that the Pontiff cannot err: because it pertains to the doctrine and truth of the matters of the Christian Religion: for if he could err in this, the definition concerning the truth of Faith would not be altogether certain, because it could happen that he should condemn as rash some proposition which was more consonant to the principles of Faith than contrary to them, which is in no way to be admitted. And so I judge it to be an error to assert that the Pontiff can err in these Censures. Thus Turrianus, who, in censura Theologica, quæ adest in tomo Selectarum Disputationum, in Centuria prima, dubio 56., having asked whether it deserves a censure to assert that the Pontiff can err concerning the censures of propositions, answers that it is certain that the Pontiff cannot err in assigning the censure of any proposition, because in things pertaining to doctrine he cannot err, and to assert the opposite is impious, scandalous, rash, and erroneous.
122. Et quidem Coninch, de Actibus supernat. disputatione octava, dubio octavo, numero 135. (prosequitur Diana) docet, eum, qui negat prædictas censuras, asserere aliquid, ex quo per evidentem consequentiam deducitur hæresis, & Eminentissimus Dominus meus Cardinalis Lugo, de Fide, disputatione vigesima, numero 109. asserit, tale assertum fore erroneum, & errori proximum quod antea dixerat Bannes, in 2. 2. D. Thomæ, quæstione 10. articulo 2.		122. And indeed Coninch, de Actibus supernat. disputatione octava, dubio octavo, numero 135. (Diana pursues) teaches that he who denies the aforesaid censures asserts something from which by an evident consequence heresy is deduced; and my Most Eminent Lord Cardinal Lugo, de Fide, disputatione vigesima, numero 109., asserts that such an assertion would be erroneous, and next to error; which Bañes had said before, in 2. 2. D. Thomæ, quæstione 10. articulo 2.
123. Verum Malderus, in 2. 2. D. Thomæ, quæstione undecima, articulo		123. But Malderus, in 2. 2. D. Thomæ, quæstione undecima, articulo secundo, membro

Latin		English
secundo, membro quinto, distinguendum putat; dicit enim revelationem quidem esse à Deo, Ecclesiam non posse errare in definitionibus circa doctrinam, adeoque, qui hoc negaret cum pertinacia, fore hæreticum; si autem ipse affirmaret propositionem, quam Ecclesia censuit esse temerariam, sed veram; nisi simul dicat Ecclesiam errare in huiusmodi censura, non erit hæreticus, sed incurreret in errorem hæresi proximum. Si enim hæc propositio non sit temeraria, sequitur aliquid contra Fidem, nimirum, Ecclesiam errare in definitionibus circa doctrinam. Itaque distinguendum est: Vel enim, qui negat hanc propositionem esse temerariam, solum intendit dicere eam esse veram, & sic non erit hæreticus, etiam si noverit Ecclesiam determinasse quod sit temeraria: potest enim fieri, ut non nisi probabile putet Ecclesiam in talibus non posse errare, aut ut noverit quidem Ecclesiam hoc damnasce tanquam temerarium, & credat quidquid ut temerarium damnat Ecclesia esse revera tale; sed non pertractet illa simul ad concludendum hoc esse vere temerarium, vel intendit sustinere pertinaciter Ecclesiam errare in censura istius propositionis, & erit hæreticus.		quinto, thinks a distinction must be made; for he says that it is indeed by revelation from God that the Church cannot err in definitions concerning doctrine, and thus that he who should deny this with pertinacity would be a heretic; but if he himself should affirm a proposition which the Church has judged to be rash, but true — unless he at the same time say that the Church errs in a censure of this kind — he will not be a heretic, but will incur an error next to heresy. For if this proposition be not rash, something follows against Faith, namely, that the Church errs in definitions concerning doctrine. And so a distinction must be made: For either he who denies this proposition to be rash intends only to say that it is true, and thus he will not be a heretic, even if he knows that the Church has determined that it is rash — for it can come about that he thinks it only probable that the Church cannot err in such matters, or that he knows indeed that the Church has condemned this as rash, and believes that whatever the Church condemns as rash is really such, but does not put these together so as to conclude that this is truly rash — or he intends pertinaciously to maintain that the Church errs in the censure of that proposition, and he will be a heretic.
124. Et hanc Malderi sententiam (addit Diana) docet etiam Pater Oviedo, de Fide, controversia 4. puncto 9. numero 124. asserit enim posse pertinaciter negare censuram ab Ecclesia illatam; quin iudicet Ecclesiam posse errare, ac proinde ex hoc capite fore hæreticum, qui illam negaret, non præcise, quia negaret censuram, quia hanc non definit Pontifex ut revelatam, sed quia negaret specialem assistentiam Spiritus Sancti, vi cuius Pontifici nunquam errare permittet, & contra hanc assistentiam assereret, Pontificem de facto errasse. Hæc Doctor ille, quæ quoad mores, parum relevare videntur, pertinaciter negantem propositionem à Pontifice damnatam; sive enim illam neget, quia iudicet, vel non, Pontificem posse errare, vel quia illi neget assistentiam Spiritus		124. And this opinion of Malderus (Diana adds) Father Oviedo also teaches, de Fide, controversia 4. puncto 9. numero 124.; for he asserts that one can pertinaciously deny a censure inflicted by the Church without judging that the Church can err, and accordingly that on this head he would be a heretic who should deny it — not precisely because he would deny the censure, since the Pontiff does not define this as revealed, but because he would deny the special assistance of the Holy Spirit, in virtue of which He will never permit the Pontiff to err, and against this assistance would assert that the Pontiff had in fact erred. Thus that Doctor; which things, as regards morals, seem to relieve little the one pertinaciously denying a proposition condemned by the Pontiff; for whether he denies it because he judges, or does not judge, that the Pontiff can err, or because he denies to him the assistance of the Holy Spirit,

Latin		English
Sancti, semper erit hæreticus propositionem negans.		he will always be a heretic in denying the proposition.
CONCLUSIO II.		CONCLUSION II.
125. Opiniones ab Alexandro Septimo damnatæ, & contentæ in Decretis, de quibus in titulo Quæstionis, omni carent probabilitate, & sunt omnino falsæ post Decreta dicta: adeo, ut sint, non solum non probabiles, id est gravi destitutæ fundamento, sed etiam improbables positive, id est certo falsæ.		125. The opinions condemned by Alexander the Seventh, and contained in the Decrees of which the title of the Question treats, lack all probability, and are altogether false after the said Decrees: so much so that they are not only not probable, that is, destitute of a grave foundation, but also positively improbable, that is, certainly false.
126. Hanc conclusionem tenet Pater Joannes de Cardenas in Crisi Theologica, tractatu 1. disputatione nona, capite 20. articulo 8. Et probatur quoad primam partem, de non probabilitate opinionum damnatarum: quia implicat contradictionem, doctrinam esse probabilem, & prudenti fundamento innitentem; etiam simul in ratione doctrinæ moralis scandalum generare, & animarum perniciem. Quia ex quo in materia morali doctrina sit scandalizans, prudens non est. Quia prudens doctrina in materia morum illa est, quæ mores incorruptos servat; quæ autem scandalizat, & animabus perniciem infert, non aliter eam infert, nisi quatenus mores corrumpit, & ad peccatum inclinât, & provocat. Ergo eo ipso quod propositiones sint scandalosæ, necessario sunt non probabiles.		126. This conclusion Father John de Cardenas holds, in Crisi Theologica, tractatu 1. disputatione nona, capite 20. articulo 8. And it is proved as to the first part, concerning the non-probability of the condemned opinions: because it implies a contradiction that a doctrine be probable, and resting on a prudent foundation, and at the same time, in the character of a moral doctrine, generate scandal and the ruin of souls. Because from the fact that in moral matter a doctrine is scandalizing, it is not prudent. For a prudent doctrine in matter of morals is that which preserves morals uncorrupted; but that which scandalizes, and brings ruin to souls, does not bring it otherwise than inasmuch as it corrupts morals, and inclines and provokes to sin. Therefore by the very fact that the propositions are scandalous, they are necessarily not probable.
127. Quoad secundam vero partem conclusionis, ut illam probemus, aliqua supponi debent. Primum est, magnum intercedere discrimen inter eam propositionem, quæ in materia morum scandalosæ censetur judicio privati cujuslibet Doctoris, & inter eam, quæ in simili, materia expresso judicio Pontificis Summi qua talis, & loquentis ex Cathedra scandalosa asseritur. Hoc enim expressum Papæ judicium, duo habet, quibus caret cujuslibet privati Doctoris judicium: certitudinem nempe, & perpetuitatem. Certitudinem quidem: quia Papa ex Cathedra loquens Ecclesiæ, in materia morum, errare non potest, uti late probat P. Cardenas dicta disp. 9. capite 6. & nos supra, num. 99. & seqq.		127. But as to the second part of the conclusion, in order that we may prove it, some things must be supposed. The first is that there is a great difference between that proposition which in matter of morals is judged scandalous by the judgment of any private Doctor, and that which in like matter is asserted to be scandalous by the express judgment of the Supreme Pontiff as such, and speaking ex Cathedra . For this express judgment of the Pope has two things which the judgment of any private Doctor lacks: namely, certitude and perpetuity. Certitude indeed: because the Pope speaking ex Cathedra to the Church, in matter of morals, cannot err, as Fr. Cardenas amply proves, dicta disp. 9. capite 6., and we above, num. 99. & seqq.

Latin		English
128. Perpetuitatem etiam habet Papæ iudicium loquentis ex Cathedra: quia reliqui Doctores privati per hanc propositionem; Hæc assertio non est probabilis; significant, non adesse de præsentī fundamentum grave pro ea assertione; & ideo apud illos æquivalet illi; Hæc est assertio non habens fundamentum grave, dum non apparet aliud fundamentum, præter ea, quæ de præsentī afferuntur pro ea. Et ideo relinquitur locus, ut si postea apparuerit fundamentum grave, transeat assertio de non probabili, in probabilem. Quod ita de facto contigisse, certum est; cum multæ propositiones, quæ olim non erant probabiles, jam apparente denuo fundamento gravi sint probabiles. Papa vero, cum è Petri loquitur Sede Ecclesiæ, & opinionis negat probabilitatem, aut affirmat scandalosam eam esse, id docet, Ecclesiæque declarat in perpetuum, tanquam omni tempore sustinendam. Et ideo non dicit solum, quod de præsentī nullum pro ea fundamentum apparet grave, sed quod nec unquam apparebit, & quod semper pro scandalosa reputanda est. Unde omnimodam relinquit desperationem de ejus probabilitate, aut de ablatione scandali, quod propositio ipsa secum importat.		128. The judgment of the Pope speaking ex Cathedra has perpetuity also: because the other private Doctors, by this proposition, This assertion is not probable, signify that there is not at present a grave foundation for that assertion; and therefore among them it is equivalent to this: This is an assertion not having a grave foundation, so long as no other foundation appears beyond those which are at present brought forward for it. And therefore room is left that, if afterwards a grave foundation should appear, the assertion may pass from non-probable into probable. That this has in fact so happened is certain, since many propositions which formerly were not probable are now probable, a grave foundation having appeared anew. But the Pope, when he speaks to the Church from the See of Peter, and denies the probability of an opinion, or affirms it to be scandalous, teaches this and declares it to the Church in perpetuity, as to be maintained at all times. And therefore he does not say only that at present no grave foundation appears for it, but that none ever will appear, and that it is always to be reputed scandalous. Whence he leaves an utter despair of its probability, or of the removal of the scandal which the proposition itself carries with it.
129. Secundum, quod supponimus est, quod ubi aliquis, absque errandi periculo, tradit propositionem esse falsam, illa est certo falsa. Et ratio est, quia immunitas à periculo errandi, certitudinem involvit: ubi autem est certitudo, non est errandi contingentia; & ubi est contingentia errandi, non est certitudo. Item, ubi excluditur contingentia errandi, adest certitudo; & ubi excluditur certitudo, contingentia errandi astruitur, affirmatur.		129. The second thing which we suppose is that, where someone, without danger of erring, hands on that a proposition is false, that proposition is certainly false. And the reason is, because immunity from the danger of erring involves certitude: but where there is certitude, there is no contingency of erring; and where there is contingency of erring, there is no certitude. Likewise, where the contingency of erring is excluded, certitude is present; and where certitude is excluded, the contingency of erring is built up and affirmed.
130. Tertium est, propositionem scandalosam dupliciter considerari posse, vel qua scandalosa à parte rei, & ante quamlibet hominum existimationem; vel qua scandalosam, præsupposita hominum existimatione.		130. The third is that a scandalous proposition can be considered in two ways: either as scandalous a parte rei, and before any estimation of men whatsoever; or as scandalous, the estimation of men being presupposed. For it happens sometimes that an

Latin		English
contigit enim aliquando, opinionem veram esse à parte rei, sed quia homines ignorant fundament. grave ejus veritatis, fit, quod ea propositio probabilis non sit, cum absque fundamentum gravi, probabilis esse non possit. In hoc igitur casu, à parte rei scandalosa non est, cum contineat doctrinam veram à parte rei, & licitam, & innoxiam; supposita tamen existimatione hominum, quæ ad fundamentum non pertingit veritatis, est scandalosa, cum dirigere conscientiam suadeat, absque gravi fundamento apparente.		opinion is true a parte rei, but, because men are ignorant of the grave foundation of its truth, it comes about that that proposition is not probable, since without a grave foundation it cannot be probable. In this case, therefore, it is not scandalous a parte rei, since it contains a doctrine true a parte rei, and lawful, and harmless; yet, the estimation of men being supposed, which does not reach to the foundation of the truth, it is scandalous, since it persuades one to direct conscience without an apparent grave foundation.
131. Quibus suppositis secunda pars nostræ conclusionis probatur, quod scil. propositiones ab Alexand. Papa VII. damnatæ, ut scandalosæ, sint positive improbabilis, & certo falsæ. Primo, Quia quando Papa ex Cathedra loquens damnat expresso judicio, in materia morum, propositionem aliquam, ut scandalosa, illam damnat ut falsam: sed id judicium Papæ in materia morum est certum: ergo talis propositio evadit certo falsa. Consequentia evidens est, quia quotiescumque judicium de falsitate propositionis est certum, propositio evadit certo falsa.		131. These things being supposed, the second part of our conclusion is proved, namely, that the propositions condemned by Pope Alexander VII as scandalous are positively improbable and certainly false. First, because when the Pope, speaking ex Cathedra, condemns by an express judgment, in matter of morals, some proposition as scandalous, he condemns it as false: but that judgment of the Pope in matter of morals is certain: therefore such a proposition turns out certainly false. The consequence is evident, because as often as the judgment concerning the falsity of a proposition is certain, the proposition turns out certainly false.
132. Major clara constat, & ostenditur. Quia propositio, quam Romanus Pontifex ex Cathedra in materia morum damnat ut scandalosam à parte rei, non potest esse vera. Nam si à parte rei esset vera, à parte rei esset licitum ejus objectum, & solum ob ignorantiam esset illicitum: ergo Rom. Pontif. erraret, si ex Cathedra in materia morum damnet ut illicitum, objectum à parte rei licitum. Sed Romanus Pontifex ex Cathedra loquens errare non potest in materia morum: ergo objectum à parte rei licitum, non potest damnare ut illicitum. Ergo Rom. Pontif. eo ipso, quod ex Cathedra damnet propositionem in materia morum ut scandalosam, illa vera esse non potest à parte rei: ergo eo ipso, quod damnet illam, ut scandalosam, damnat eam, ut falsam.		132. The major is clearly established, and is shown. Because a proposition which the Roman Pontiff ex Cathedra in matter of morals condemns as scandalous a parte rei cannot be true. For if a parte rei it were true, its object would a parte rei be lawful, and only through ignorance would it be unlawful: therefore the Roman Pontiff would err, if ex Cathedra in matter of morals he should condemn as unlawful an object lawful a parte rei. But the Roman Pontiff speaking ex Cathedra cannot err in matter of morals: therefore he cannot condemn as unlawful an object lawful a parte rei. Therefore the Roman Pontiff, by the very fact that ex Cathedra he condemns a proposition in matter of morals as scandalous, [establishes that] it cannot be true a parte rei: therefore by the very fact that he condemns it as scandalous, he condemns it as false.

Latin		English
133. Aliud autem est dicendum, quando Doctor privatus (& idem dico de Papa non loquente ex Cathedra) censet propositionem aliquam scandalosam: quia ad hoc privatum iudicium sufficit, quod pro illa propositione, ut scandalosa notata, non appareat ullum grave fundamentum: quia privatus Doctor capax est ignorantiae, (pro ut ignorantia dicit quodlibet scientiae defectum) de eo, quod est à parte rei. Cum autem Summus Pontifex ex Cathedra loquens, non sit capax ignorantiae in iudicio expresse, quod in materia morum format, ob infalibilem St. Spiritus assistentiam in re tam gravi; Inde est, quod dum propositionem in materia morum affirmat scandalosam, illa à parte rei vera esse non posset.		133. But another thing must be said when a private Doctor (and I say the same of the Pope not speaking ex Cathedra) judges some proposition scandalous: because for this private judgment it suffices that for that proposition, noted as scandalous, no grave foundation appear: because a private Doctor is capable of ignorance (inasmuch as ignorance means any defect of knowledge whatsoever) concerning that which is a parte rei. But since the Supreme Pontiff speaking ex Cathedra is not capable of ignorance in the express judgment which he forms in matter of morals, on account of the infallible assistance of the Holy Spirit in a matter so grave, hence it is that, while he affirms a proposition in matter of morals to be scandalous, it could not be true a parte rei.
134. Confirmatur. Cum Rom. Pontif. damnat ex Cathedra propositionem, ut scandalosam in materia morum, non damnat illam tanquam scandalosam ex præsupsita ignorantia hominum, sed tanquam vere, & à parte rei scandalosam; alias erraret in materia morum, si objectum à parte rei licitum, & honestum, reprobaret ut scandalosum: sed doctrina quæ à parte rei est scandalosa, non potest à parte rei esse vera: ergo à parte rei ea doctrina damnata non potest esse vera. Et cum id iudicium Papæ ex Cathedra sit certum: ea propositio manet certo falsa.		134. It is confirmed. When the Roman Pontiff condemns ex Cathedra a proposition as scandalous in matter of morals, he does not condemn it as scandalous from a presupposed ignorance of men, but as truly and a parte rei scandalous; otherwise he would err in matter of morals, if he should reprobate as scandalous an object lawful and honest a parte rei: but a doctrine which is a parte rei scandalous cannot a parte rei be true: therefore a parte rei that condemned doctrine cannot be true. And since that judgment of the Pope ex Cathedra is certain, that proposition remains certainly false.
135. Secundo probatur secunda conclusionis nostræ pars. Dum Summus Pontifex docens è Cathedra Ecclesiam in materia morum, definit propositionem esse scandalosam, vi ejus oraculi manet certo, & in perpetuum destituta fundamento gravi, & cum certa, & omnimoda desperatione de probabilitate ejus: sed propositio, quæ manet certo, & in perpetuum non probabilis, & cum certa, & omnimoda desperatione de probabilitate ejus, manet certo falsa, atque adeo improbabilis positivè: ergo propositio, quam Summus Pontifex docens Ecclesiam ex Cathedra in materia m[o]rum, definit esse		135. Secondly the second part of our conclusion is proved. While the Supreme Pontiff, teaching the Church from the Chair in matter of morals, defines a proposition to be scandalous, by force of that oracle it remains certainly and in perpetuity destitute of a grave foundation, and with a certain and utter despair of its probability: but a proposition which remains certainly and in perpetuity not probable, and with a certain and utter despair of its probability, remains certainly false, and thus positively improbable: therefore a proposition which the Supreme Pontiff, teaching the Church ex Cathedra in matter of morals, defines to be scandalous, remains certainly false and positively improbable. The scandalosam, manet certo falsa, & improbabilis positive. Consequentia patet. Major autem constat ex dictis supra numero 128 .		consequence is plain. But the major is established from the things said supra numero 128 .

Latin		English
136. Et minor probatur. Quando propositio est vera à parte rei, nullum principium certum obstat quo minus aliquando aliquod fundamentum grave appareat ad prædictam veritatem promovendam: nam contra veritatem, aut contra fundamentum ejus nullum principium certum existere potest, quod re vera certum sit: ergo quando est principium certum contra fundamentum alicujus propositionis, talis propositio vera esse non potest: ergo est certo falsa. Sed cum Summus Pontifex in materia morum expresso judicio affirmat in perpetuum, propositionem non esse probabilem, id principium certum excludit in perpetuum quodlibet fundamentum grave ejus propositionis: ergo in eo casu propositio sic damnata, vera esse non potest: ergo necessario, & certissime est falsa.		136. And the minor is proved. When a proposition is true a parte rei , no certain principle stands in the way but that at some time some grave foundation may appear for promoting the aforesaid truth: for against truth, or against its foundation, no certain principle can exist which is really certain: therefore when there is a certain principle against the foundation of some proposition, such a proposition cannot be true: therefore it is certainly false. But when the Supreme Pontiff in matter of morals by an express judgment affirms in perpetuity that a proposition is not probable, that certain principle excludes in perpetuity any grave foundation whatsoever of that proposition: therefore in that case the proposition so condemned cannot be true: therefore necessarily and most certainly it is false.
137. Ubi notandum est, quod quando Doctor privatus dicit propositionem aliquam esse positive improbabilem, si verum dicit, omnino tollit spem, aut formidinem futuræ probabilitatis; atque de improbabili non posse propositionem in probabilem transire. Id enim asserere non potest, nisi ex vero principio, cum improbabile positive, idem sit, quod certo falsum: principium autem certum, quod cogit ad asserendam falsitatem propositionis, nullam de opposito formidinem relinquit.		137. Where it must be noted that, when a private Doctor says some proposition to be positively improbable, if he says the truth, he takes away entirely the hope, or the fear, of a future probability; and that the proposition cannot pass from improbable into probable. For he cannot assert this save from a true principle, since to be positively improbable is the same as to be certainly false: but a certain principle, which compels one to assert the falsity of a proposition, leaves no fear concerning the opposite.
138. Concludo dicendo, quod ut propositio in materia morum scandalosa sit, salvatur, in hoc quod non sit probabilis, sive in eo, quod gravi careat fundamento in hominum existimatione, cum conscientias ad operandum dirigat in morum, sine gravi fundamento, quamvis ea, à parte rei vera forte sit. Cum autem id contingat ex defectu scientiæ in materia morum quæ cadere neutiquam potest in Romano Pontifice, ex Cathedra docente Ecclesiam, inde est,		138. I conclude by saying that, for a proposition in matter of morals to be scandalous, it is verified in this, that it be not probable, or in this, that it lack a grave foundation in the estimation of men, since it directs consciences to act in morals without a grave foundation, although a parte rei it be perhaps true. But since this happens from a defect of knowledge in matter of morals, which can by no means fall upon the Roman Pontiff teaching the Church ex Cathedra , hence it is that the said Pontiff, as such, and as teaching ex Cathedra , cannot teach

Latin		English
non posse dictum Pontificem, qua talem, & qua ex Cathedra docentem, docere aliquam opinionem esse scandalosam, si à parte rei illa vera sit. Unde quoties Papa ex Cathedra in materia morum affirmat, esse, improbabilem positive. Et sic quamvis dicens scandalosam, simul dicat, eam non esse probabilem, eo ipso affirmat esse positive improbabilem. Libet nihilominus hic recensere Cardin. de Lugo, de Virtute Fidei divinæ, disp. 20. sect. 3. n. 99. pag. 555. in sequentia prorumpentem.		some opinion to be scandalous, if a parte rei it be true. Whence, as often as the Pope ex Cathedra in matter of morals affirms [a proposition to be scandalous, he affirms it] to be positively improbable [?]. And thus, although in saying it scandalous he at the same time says that it is not probable, by that very fact he affirms it to be positively improbable. It is well nevertheless here to recount Cardinal de Lugo, de Virtute Fidei divinæ, disp. 20. sect. 3. n. 99. pag. 555., breaking forth into what follows.
Propositio scandalosa, intelligi debet, quæ præstat occasionem ruinæ spiritualis, inclinando auditores ad peccata, vel avocando eos ab exercitio virtutum. Tales propositiones detrahentium Religioso statui, pericula item piorum exercitiorum exaggerantium, unde tepescunt homines, & timent, ne in his periculum sibi lateat. Item si quis populo ad venerationem Eucharistiæ, vel alicujus Sancti concurrenti, dicat, quis scit, an hæc Hostia sit consecrata? quis scit, an hoc sit corpus illius Sancti, & non sit corpus alicujus malefactoris, loco illius suppositum? Quæ omnia, in aliquo vero sensu, possunt non esse contra fidem; generant tamen scandalum, & removent homines ab exercitio pietatis. Aliud exemplum affert Suarez, numero 19. nempe si quis absolute dicat imagines non esse adorandas. Hæc tamen propositio plus est, quam scandalosa, cum erret etiam circa ipsum dogma fidei, ut constat ex Concilio Tridentino, sessione 15. & ex formula professionis fidei per Pium IV. edita, & quam omnes Episcopi, & aliæ personæ emittere tenentur. Hactenus Cardinalis de Lugo.		A scandalous proposition must be understood as one which affords occasion of spiritual ruin, by inclining hearers to sins, or by calling them away from the exercise of virtues. Such are the propositions of those who detract from the Religious state, and likewise of those who exaggerate the dangers of pious exercises, whence men grow lukewarm, and fear lest in these a danger lie hidden for them. Likewise, if anyone should say to a people gathering for the veneration of the Eucharist, or of some Saint: who knows whether this Host be consecrated? who knows whether this be the body of that Saint, and not the body of some malefactor, substituted in his place? All which things, in some true sense, can be not against faith; yet they generate scandal, and remove men from the exercise of piety. Another example Suarez brings forward, numero 19., namely, if anyone should say absolutely that images are not to be adored. This proposition, however, is more than scandalous, since it errs also concerning the very dogma of faith, as is established from the Council of Trent, sessione 15., and from the formula of the profession of faith published by Pius IV, and which all Bishops and other persons are bound to emit. Thus far Cardinal de Lugo.
CONCLUSIO III.		CONCLUSION III.
139. Ita omnes, & singulæ opiniones ab Alexandro Papa Septimo damnatæ, exulare debent ab omni disputatione; nedum publica, sed etiam secreta, aut privata, nisi eas impugnando, ut mortaliter delinquat quicumque eas in disputationem deduxerit, & in		139. So all and each of the opinions condemned by Pope Alexander the Seventh must be banished from all disputation, not only public, but even secret or private, save by way of impugning them; so that whosoever shall have brought them into disputation sins mortally, and

Latin		English
excommunicationem Sedi Apostolicæ reservatam incidat.		incurs an excommunication reserved to the Apostolic See.
140. Ita docet Felguera, in Sum. tract. 13. cap. 1. artic. 8. duda 3 . Hæc conclusio, alia probatione non indiget ulla, quam recensione utriusque Decreti verborum. In primo enim ita dicitur. Quibus peractis; dum similium propositionum examini cura, & studium impenditur, interea idem Sanctissimus, re mature considerata, statuit, & decrevit, prædictas propositiones, & unamquamque ipsarum, ut minimum tanquam scandalosas esse damnandas, & prohibendas, sicut eas damnat, & prohibet; ita ut quicumque illas, aut conjunctim, aut divisim docuerit, defenderit, aut ediderit, aut de iis etiam disputative, publice, aut privatim tractaverit, nisi forte impugnando, ipso facto incidat in excommunicationem, à qua non possit (præterquam in mortis articulo) ab alio, quacumque etiam dignitate fulgente, nisi à pro tempore existente Romano Pontifice absolvi.		140. So Felguera teaches, in Sum. tract. 13. cap. 1. artic. 8. duda 3 . This conclusion needs no other proof whatsoever than the recounting of the words of each Decree. For in the first it is said thus. Which things being done, while care and study are bestowed on the examination of like propositions, meanwhile the same Most Holy Lord, the matter having been maturely considered, has established and decreed that the aforesaid propositions, and each one of them, are, at the least, to be condemned and prohibited as scandalous, even as he does condemn and prohibit them; so that whosoever shall have taught, defended, or published them, either conjointly or severally, or shall have treated of them, even disputatively, publicly or privately, unless perchance by way of impugning them, shall ipso facto incur excommunication, from which he cannot (except at the point of death) be absolved by any other, however resplendent with dignity, save by the Roman Pontiff existing for the time being.
141. In secundo autem Decreto, sequentia lego. Quibus mature pensatis, idem Sanctissimus statuit, aut decrevit, prædictas propositiones: & unamquamque ipsarum, ut minimum, tanquam scandalosas esse damnandas, & prohibendas, sicut eas damnat, & prohibet; ita ut quicumque illas, aut conjunctim, aut divisim docuerit, defenderit, ediderit, aut de iis, etiam disputative, publice, aut privatim tractaverit, nisi forsitan impugnando, ipso facto incidat in excommunicationem, à qua non possit (præterquam in articulo mortis) ab alio, quacumque etiam dignitate fulgente, nisi à pro tempore existente Romano Pontifice, absolvi. Hæc in utroque Decreto habentur.		141. But in the second Decree I read the following. These things being maturely weighed, the same Most Holy Lord has established and decreed that the aforesaid propositions, and each one of them, are, at the least, to be condemned and prohibited as scandalous, even as he does condemn and prohibit them; so that whosoever shall have taught, defended, published them, or shall have treated of them, even disputatively, publicly or privately, unless perchance by way of impugning them, shall ipso facto incur excommunication, from which he cannot (except at the point of death) be absolved by any other, however resplendent with dignity, save by the Roman Pontiff existing for the time being. These things are had in each Decree.
142. Ex quibus manifeste sequitur, peccavisse mortaliter, & excommunicationem Papæ reservatam contraxisse quendam, qui per me ipsum certificatus, de dictorum Decretorum tenore, variis vicibus coram me, & aliis asseruit, Decreta præfata ab opinionibus,		142. From which it manifestly follows that he sinned mortally, and contracted the excommunication reserved to the Pope, who — having been certified by me myself of the tenor of the said Decrees — asserted on various occasions before me and others that the aforesaid Decrees by no means take away and

Latin		English
per eademmet damnata, & prohibita, probabilitatem nequaquam auferre, & tollere; sed in ea, in qua antea fuerunt probabilitate permanere.		remove probability from the opinions condemned and prohibited by those very Decrees, but that they remain in that probability in which they were before.
CONCLUSIO. IV.		CONCLUSION IV.
143. QUicumque fidelis, aliquam ex opinionibus per Alexandrum Septimum damnatis, & prohibitis ad praxim reducerit, juxta eam operando, lethale peccatum committit. Illam tenet Filguera dicta duda 3.		143. Whatsoever member of the faithful shall have reduced to practice any of the opinions condemned and prohibited by Alexander the Seventh, by acting according to it, commits a deadly sin. This Filguera holds, dicta duda 3.
Hæc conclusio ita clare definita est in utroque Decreto, ut nullam in puncto dubitandi relinquat rationem Alexander: ait enim in utriusque fine: Insuper districte in virtute sanctæ obedientiæ, & sub interminatione divini judicii prohibet omnibus Christi Fidelibus, cujuscumque conditionis, dignitatis, ac status, etiam speciali, & specialissima nota dignis, ne prædictas opiniones, aut aliquam ipsarum, ad praxim deducant. Clausula enim: In virtute sanctæ obedientiæ: idem importare dixi in Disquisitionum tomo 1. tract. 7. disquisitione 6. numero 6. ac sub pœna peccati obedientiæ, ita ut transgressores incurrant in peccatum inobedientiæ, quod gravissimum quidem est, cum Fideles omnes, Summo Ecclesiæ Principi, & Christo Domini Nostri Vicario Generali Romano Pontifici obedire teneamur: & transgressori pœna depositionis à Canone infligitur, ubi alia statuta reperta non fuerit, uti docet Joannes Baptista Ventriglia, in Praxi rerum notabilium, annotatione 52. de Electione sepulturæ, §. unico, numero 36. cum Fusco, de Visitatione, libro 1. capite 31. numero 8. & 9. Cum autem dicta pœna adeo gravis sit, cnlpa ob quam infligitur lethalis erit, uti docent dictus Ventriglia, Glossa in cap. Animarum, el 1. de Sepulturis, libro 6. & Trullench, tomo 3. tractatu de Jure Parochi, capite 9. dubio 5. numero 15. Et patet ex eo, quod pœna, est mensura culpæ, cap. Cognoscentur, el 2. de Constitutionibus, ubi Glossa, verbo Culpa caret. & marginalis. Glossa etiam in cap. Sine culpa, el 23. de Regulis		This conclusion is so clearly defined in each Decree that Alexander leaves no ground for doubting on the point: for he says at the end of each: Moreover, strictly, in virtue of holy obedience, and under the threat of the divine judgment, he forbids all the faithful of Christ, of whatsoever condition, dignity, and state, even such as are worthy of special and most special note, to reduce the aforesaid opinions, or any of them, to practice. For the clause In virtue of holy obedience I have said, in Disquisitionum tomo 1. tract. 7. disquisitione 6. numero 6., imports the same as under pain of the sin of obedience, so that transgressors incur the sin of disobedience, which is indeed most grave, since we, all the Faithful, are bound to obey the Supreme Prince of the Church, and the General Vicar of Christ our Lord, the Roman Pontiff: and upon the transgressor the penalty of deposition is inflicted by the Canon, where another has not been found established, as John Baptist Ventriglia teaches, in Praxi rerum notabilium, annotatione 52. de Electione sepulturæ, §. unico, numero 36., with Fuscus, de Visitatione, libro 1. capite 31. numero 8. & 9. But since the said penalty is so grave, the fault for which it is inflicted will be deadly, as the said Ventriglia teaches, the Gloss in cap. Animarum, el 1. de Sepulturis, libro 6., and Trullench, tomo 3. tractatu de Jure Parochi, capite 9. dubio 5. numero 15. And it is plain from this, that the penalty is the measure of the fault, cap. Cognoscentur, el 2. de Constitutionibus, where the Gloss, verbo Culpa caret, and the marginal [Gloss]. The Gloss also in cap. Sine culpa, el 23. de Regulis Juris in 6.; and the penalty ought to correspond to the fault, and to be commensurate with the offense. Barbosa axiomate 181. numero 3., and I myself

Latin		English
Juris in 6. &, pœna culpæ respondere debet, & commensurari delicto. Barbosa axiomaticæ 181. numero 3. & ego ipse in tomo 2. disquisitione quinta, numero 16. & disquisitione decima, numero 43.		in tomo 2. disquisitione quinta, numero 16. & disquisitione decima, numero 43.
144. Præterquam quod dicta clausula (saltem materiæ gravitate supposita) inducit obligationem snb mortali, à quocumque legitimo Superiore sit prolata, ut dicto tomo 1. disquisitione 6. dixi, cum Pellizzario, in Manuali Regular. tomo 2. parte 1. tract. 9. cap. 3. numero 37. Barthol. à Sancto Fausto, in Thesauro Religiosorum, libro 6. de Voto Obedientiæ, quæstione 11. numero 7. & Ascanio Tamburino, de Jure Abbatum, tomo 3. disput. 3. quæsito 6. numero 5. Et rationem reddit dictus Barthol. dicens: Ratio est, quia usus communis est, ut hæc verba indicent mentem Prælati esse, obligare ad mortale. Et colligitur (addit) ex Clementina Exivi, de Verborum significatione.		144. Besides which, the said clause (at least the gravity of the matter being supposed) induces an obligation under mortal [sin], by whatsoever legitimate Superior it be uttered, as I said dicto tomo 1. disquisitione 6., with Pellizzarius, in Manuali Regular. tomo 2. parte 1. tract. 9. cap. 3. numero 37., Bartholomew a Sancto Fausto, in Thesauro Religiosorum, libro 6. de Voto Obedientiæ, quæstione 11. numero 7., and Ascanius Tamburinus, de Jure Abbatum, tomo 3. disput. 3. quæsito 6. numero 5. And the said Bartholomew gives the reason, saying: The reason is, because the common usage is that these words indicate the mind of the Prelate to be to oblige unto mortal [sin]. And it is gathered (he adds) from the Clementine Exivi, de Verborum significatione.
145. Clausula etiam: Districte prohibet: inducit etiam peccatum mortale. Ita ubi proxime dixi, num. 8. cum Lezana tomo 2. verbo Clausula, num. 24. & colligitur ex Clementina 1. de Officio Judicis Ordinarii, juncta Glossa Marginali. In textu enim Clemens Papa Quintus similem apposuit clausulam, videlicet: Districte injungimus: Glossa autem sic ait: Si negligent, peccant mortaliter.		145. The clause also, He strictly forbids, likewise induces mortal sin. So where I said just before, num. 8., with Lezana, tomo 2. verbo Clausula, num. 24.; and it is gathered from the Clementina 1. de Officio Judicis Ordinarii, joined with the Marginal Gloss. For in the text Pope Clement the Fifth appended a similar clause, namely: We strictly enjoin: but the Gloss says thus: If they neglect it, they sin mortally.
146. Clausula item: sub interminatione Divini judicii: idem importat. ac ista: Sub interminatione maledictionis æternæ: quæ pœnam infert æternam, peccato debitam mortali, seu pro transgressionem præcepti, cui opponitur: & sic importat obligationem illud non transgrediendi, sub culpa lethali. Glossa in citato cap. Animarum, 1. de Sepult. in 6. ibi: Nota, ibi: Sub interminatione maledictionis æternæ: quod veniens contra istam Constitutionem, peccat mortaliter. Idem docent Trullench, loco citato, Ventriglia, dicto num. 36. cum Joanne Andrea, in capite Romana, §. Procuraciones, el 1. de Censibus, lib. 6. & ibi Lap. num. 1. Geminiano, numero		146. The clause likewise, under the threat of the Divine judgment, imports the same as this: Under the threat of eternal malediction, which brings an eternal penalty, due to mortal sin, or for the transgression of the precept to which it is opposed: and thus it imports an obligation of not transgressing it, under deadly fault. The Gloss in citato cap. Animarum, 1. de Sepult. in 6., there: Note, there: Under the threat of eternal malediction: that he who comes against this Constitution sins mortally. The same teach Trullench, loco citato, Ventriglia, dicto num. 36., with John Andreas, in capite Romana, §. Procuraciones, el 1. de Censibus, lib. 6., and there Lapus, num. 1., Geminianus, numero 8., Marius Alterius, tomo 1. disput. 22. lib. 5. cap. 8., upon the word Indignationem.

Latin		English
8. Mario Alterio, tomo 1. disput. 22. lib. 5. cap. 8. super verbum, Indignationem. 147. Sed dices, si quælibet ex prædictis clausulis inducit obligationem non transgrediendi Decreta Alexandri sub culpa lethali, ad quid omnium illarum in unoquoque Decreto appositio? Respondeo, nullam illarum superflue appositam fuisse, cum lex habere non debeat nec unam syllabam superfluum, & vacuum. Barbosa, axiom. 136. n. 15. ex Glossa, verbo Tanquam, in c. Solitæ, de Majoritate, & obedientia, Mandosio, in Regul. 9. Cancel. quæst. 4. n. 4. Gonzalez, ad Regulam 8. Cancel. glossa 22. nu. 5. & ego ipse, in Disquisit. tomo 2. disq. 11. dub. 17. n. 171. & 172. apposuit autem illas, ad abundantem cautelam, sive ad indicandam enixiorem voluntatem suam, circa condemnationem, & prohibitionem. quam Alexand. faciebat VII. illarum 45. opinionum, ad tradita per Pellizzarium to. 2. tr. 8. c. 4. n. 167. per Barbos. axio. 104. & de Clausuris in genere; n. 8. & per Lezan. to. 3. in Mare magnum Carmelitar. §. 4. n. 16. pag. mihi 187. in sequentia prorumpentem.		147. But you will say: if any of the aforesaid clauses induces an obligation of not transgressing the Decrees of Alexander under deadly fault, to what purpose the appending of all of them in each Decree? I answer that none of them was appended superfluously, since a law ought not to have even one syllable superfluous and empty. Barbosa, axiom. 136. n. 15. ex Glossa, verbo Tanquam, in c. Solitæ, de Majoritate, & obedientia, Mandosius, in Regul. 9. Cancel. quæst. 4. n. 4., Gonzalez, ad Regulam 8. Cancel. glossa 22. nu. 5., and I myself, in Disquisit. tomo 2. disq. 11. dub. 17. n. 171. & 172. But he appended them for abundant caution, or for indicating his more earnest will concerning the condemnation and prohibition which Alexander VII was making of those 45 opinions, according to the things handed on by Pellizzarius to. 2. tr. 8. c. 4. n. 167., by Barbosa axio. 104., and concerning Clauses in general, n. 8., and by Lezana to. 3. in Mare magnum Carmelitar. §. 4. n. 16. pag. mihi 187., breaking forth into what follows.
148. Pontifex iste utitur illis verbis: statu firmo, & solido, & stabili: quæ idem important, & sunt veluti synonyma ad maiorem rei firmitatem ab ipso adjuncta: Verborum enim idem significantium multiplicatio, seu geminatio, maiorem deliberationem, & enixam voluntatem denotat. L. Balista, ff. ad Trebell. Barth. in L. Cum scimus, n. 7. c. de Agricolis censitis, l. 11. Decius, in L. 1. n. 3. c. de Pact. & consil. 51. colum. 2. & consil. 180. col. 3. Gutierrez, Practic. Quæstionum lib 3. quæst. 17. n. 134. Tuschus, Practic. conclusionum, tomo 4. conclus. 28. & plures alii apud Barbosam, in tract. de Axiomatib. axiom. 105. num. 1. præsertim, quia verba geminata operantur, quod nihil possit opponi. Curtius, in Consilio 278. num. 18. Tuschus, supra Barbosa, supra, num. 8.		148. That Pontiff uses these words: in a firm, and solid, and stable state: which import the same, and are as it were synonyms adjoined by him for the greater firmness of the matter: for the multiplication, or doubling, of words signifying the same denotes greater deliberation and earnest will. L. Balista, ff. ad Trebell. Bartholus, in L. Cum scimus, n. 7. c. de Agricolis censitis, l. 11. Decius, in L. 1. n. 3. c. de Pact. & consil. 51. colum. 2. & consil. 180. col. 3. Gutierrez, Practic. Quæstionum lib. 3. quæst. 17. n. 134. Tuschus, Practic. conclusionum, tomo 4. conclus. 28., and several others in Barbosa, in tract. de Axiomatib. axiom. 105. num. 1., especially because doubled words operate so that nothing can be opposed. Curtius, in Consilio 278. num. 18. Tuschus, supra; Barbosa, supra, num. 8.