

Vega 1548 (parallel)

Vega — Tridentini decreti de iustificatione expositio (Venice 1548)

Latin–English parallel text: lib. I cap. V; lib. IX capp. IV, XXXIX, XLI, XLVI

Latin	English
BLOCK A — Lib. I, cap. V, De authoritate Synodi Tridentinae ### PDF 72 = fol. 4v · PDF 73 = fol. 5r	BLOCK A — Lib. I, cap. V, On the authority of the Synod of Trent ### PDF 72 = fol. 4v · PDF 73 = fol. 5r
{head: DE AVT. ET VTIL. DECRETI. / De autoritate Synodi Tridentinæ. Cap. V.}	{head: ON THE AUTH. AND USEF. OF THE DECREE. / On the authority of the Synod of Trent. Chap. V.}
[...]	[...]
Et singillatim possumus docere hanc Synodum habuisse omnia, propter quæ sic erat in priores illas quatuor affectus	And point by point we can show that this Synod had all those things on account of

Latin	English
sanctus hic pontifex. Fuit enim hæc Synodus in spiritu sancto legitime congregata, quia autoritate Apostolica ob grauissimas causas indicta, & conuocata est. Quod unum satis est, & requiritur ad legitimam in spiritu sancto congregationem, ut patet ex multis sanctorum patrum decretis. Et habuit præsidentes uice summi pontificis non quosuis, sed tres Reuerendissimos Dominos Cardinales Apostolicæ sedis de latere legatos. Nam quod huic sessioni duo tantummodo ex ipsis præfuere prudentia, grauitate, pietate, et incredibili mansuetudine uniuersis spectabiles, causa fuit diuturna quædam ægritudo, quæ coegit Tridento recedere illustrissimum illum Cardinalem, qui tertio loco eis adnumeratus fuerat, Reginaldum uidelicet Polum ex regum Anglorum prosapia originem trahentem, eximium, atque adeo singulare totius nobilitatis, & sanctitatis exemplar, cœlestemque planè uirum, & angelicum potius quam Anglicum. Neque prouincialis hæc fuit Synodus, ut aliæ quæ autoritate Apostolica conuocatæ sunt, & præsidentes habuerunt Apostolicæ sedis Legatos, sed generalis, & œcumenica, quia pro causis ad totam	which this holy Pontiff was thus disposed towards those four earlier ones. For this Synod was lawfully assembled in the Holy Spirit, because it was proclaimed and convoked by Apostolic authority for causes of the greatest weight. Which one thing is enough, and is what is required for a lawful assembly in the Holy Spirit, as is clear from many decrees of the holy Fathers. And it had as presidents, in the place of the Supreme Pontiff, not just anyone, but three Most Reverend Lord Cardinals, legates de latere of the Apostolic See. For that only two of them presided over this session — men conspicuous to all for prudence, gravity, piety, and incredible gentleness — the cause was a certain long illness, which compelled that most illustrious Cardinal who had been reckoned third among them to withdraw

Latin	English
Ecclesiam spectantibus conuocati sunt Episcopi ad eam ex toto orbe Christiano, ubicunque agnoscitur Romanus Pontifex uicarius esse Christi, & in omnes Christi fideles habere potestatem. Et diligentia, et fauore beatissimi Pauli huius nominis tertij Dei gratia, & prouidentia pontificis summi, & cura, ac sollicitudine felicissimi, & Augustissimi imperatoris nostri, et aliorum Christianorum regum, & principum effectum est, ut uiderimus Tridenti antistites pietate & sapientia uenerandos ex Italia, Hispania, Gallia, Germania, Anglia, Sicilia, Neapoli, Sardinia, Hibernia, Gotia, Suetia, Dalmatia, Creta, Græcia, & ex insulis fortunatis extra orbem positis. Accessit ad hæc, quod sacrosancta ista Synodus ex benigna concessione eiusdem beatissimi Pauli autho-	from Trent: Reginald Pole, namely, who draws his origin from the stock of the kings of the English, an outstanding and indeed singular exemplar of all nobility and sanctity, a man plainly heavenly, and angelic rather than Anglic. Nor was this a provincial Synod, like others which have been convoked by Apostolic authority and have had Legates of the Apostolic See as presidents, but a general and ecumenical one, because for causes pertaining to the whole Church bishops were convoked to it from the whole Christian world, wherever the Roman Pontiff is acknowledged to be the vicar of Christ and to have power over all the faithful of Christ. And by the diligence and favour of the most blessed Paul, third of this name, by the grace and providence of God supreme Pontiff, and by the care and solicitude of our most happy and most august Emperor, and of the other Christian kings and princes, it was brought about that we have seen at Trent prelates venerable for piety and wisdom out of Italy, Spain, France, Germany, England, Sicily, Naples, Sardinia, Ireland, Gothia, Sweden, Dalmatia, Crete, Greece, and out of the Fortunate Isles set beyond the world. To these things was added, that this sacrosanct Synod, by the kind concession of the same most blessed Paul, had the fullest autho-

Latin	English
{head: LIB. I. IN PROOEMIUM 5}	{head: BOOK I. ON THE PROOEMIUM 5}
-ritatem habuit plenissimam, ut & in dogmatibus fidei, & in reformatione morum ecclesiæ, & in his, quæ necessaria uideretur ad pacem principum populi Christiani, quæcunque placerent pro arbitrato suo statueret. Neque ob eas causas, quas quidam maligne interpretantur, intermissus est ille titulus, quo concilium constantiense sæpe utitur,	-rity, that it might establish, at its own discretion, whatsoever should please it, both in the dogmas of faith, and in the reformation of the morals of the Church, and in those things which might seem necessary for the peace of the princes of the

Latin	English
nempe uniuersalem ecclesiam representans, Sed eo potius nomine, quòd cum quidem prælati omni honore digni, sancto studio & zelo, eum titulum sæpe efflagitauerint, & præmitti omnibus huius Synodi decretis uoluerint, tamen tandem maiori parti patrum placuit magis imitari modestiam antiquorum conciliorum, quæ nunquam eo titulo sunt usa. Et prudentissime sane hoc illi censuerunt, quia nulla talis causa nunc occurrebat, quæ talem titulum exposceret, qualis fuit tempore Concilij Constantiensis. Eo nanque tempore ad componendum schisma illud magnum, quod tum uigebat, commodissimum fuit, eum usurpare titulum, ut qui se pro summis pontificibus gerebant, dum Ecclesia uniuersali se inferiores agnoscerent, ad iussum Concilij, quod eam repræsentabat, pontificali suæ autoritati humiliter pro pace, & tranquillitate ipsius Ecclesiæ cæderent. At nunc cum Ecclesia Dei uno, eoque indubitato maximo pontifice gaudeat, nulla erat causa, quæ compelleret eiusmodi nihil necessario uti titulo. Verum cum hæc sancta Synodus legatos habuerit summi pontificis, & ad eam conuocati fuerint Episcopi ex toto orbe,	Christian people. Nor was it for those causes which certain men malignly allege that that title was left out which the Council of Constance often uses, namely representing the universal Church; but rather on this account, that although certain prelates worthy of all honour, with holy earnestness and zeal, often demanded that title, and wished it to be prefixed to all the decrees of this Synod, nevertheless in the end it pleased the greater part of the Fathers rather to imitate the modesty of the ancient councils, which never used that title. And most prudently indeed did they so judge, because no such cause now arose as would demand such a title, of the kind there was in the time of the Council of Constance. For at that time, for the settling of that great schism which then prevailed,

Latin	English
& per multi fuerint prælati in ea ex diuersissimis regionibus, & nationibus, nemini uel minimum debet esse dubium, quin & uniuersalem Ecclesiam representauerit, & ea gauisus fuerit beneficentissima, & infallibili Spiritussancti præsentia, qua & aliæ Synodi generales semper in Ecclesia gauisæ sunt. Et tanta cura, & diligentia septimestri spacio omnia ad hoc decretum spectantia examinata, & expensa fuerunt ab omnibus Concilij patribus, & a clarissimis plærisque doctoribus Theologis, qui Concilij causa Tridentum conuenerunt, ut nephas uideatur, de aliqua parte ipsius dubitare.	it was most convenient to employ that title, so that those who bore themselves as supreme pontiffs, while acknowledging themselves inferior to the universal Church, might at the command of the Council, which represented her, humbly yield up their pontifical authority for the peace and tranquillity of that same Church. But now, since the Church of God rejoices in one — and that an undoubted — supreme Pontiff, there was no cause which should compel the use of a title of that sort, in no way necessary. But since this holy Synod has had the legates of the Supreme Pontiff, and bishops were convoked to it out of the whole world, and there were very many prelates in it out of the most diverse regions and nations, no one ought to have even the least doubt but that it both represented

Latin	English
	the universal Church and enjoyed that most beneficent and infallible presence of the Holy Spirit which the other general Synods in the Church have always enjoyed. And with such care and diligence, over a space of seven months, was everything pertaining to this decree examined and weighed by all the Fathers of the Council, and by very many most distinguished doctors of Theology who came together to Trent for the sake of the Council, that it seems a sacrilege to doubt about any part of it.
[...]	[...]
Qua in re multas & magnas merentur omnes illi a toto orbe Christiano & laudes & gratias, sed præcipuas, me iudice, grauissimus idemque religiosissimus, Reuerendissimus dominus Cardinalis sante crucis, cui huius decreti conficiendi cura potissimum incubuit. Quis dicet quantos ille labores, & quam assiduos diu ac noctu hac de causa pertulerit? Omnes	In which matter all of them deserve many and great praises and thanks from the whole Christian world, but the chief of them, in my judgement, the most grave and likewise most religious Most Reverend Lord Cardinal of Santa Croce, upon whom the care of

Latin	English
urgebat, omnes sollicitabat ad diligentem operam huic rei nauandum. Omnium sententias, omnium dubia, & priuatim, & publice, mansuetissimo, & indefatigabili animo audiebat. Ipse pro suo singulari iudicio & sapientia, multa cōrrigebat, multa mutabat, et nunc in hanc, nunc in illam formam decretum uariabat, donec id perficeret, quod perfecit, ut placeret cunctis patribus. Oculatus testis hæc loquor, & priuatas taceo per multas selectorum uirorum congregationes. Congregati sunt in unum publice, & rogati de omnibus suam quique sententiam, nunc soli patres Concilij, nunc Theologi præsentibus patribus pluries opinor, quam	framing this decree chiefly lay. Who shall tell how great and how unremitting were the labours which he bore day and night for this cause? He urged all, he pressed all to devote diligent labour to this business. The opinions of all, the doubts of all, both privately and publicly, he heard with a most gentle and untiring mind. He himself, according to his singular judgement and wisdom, corrected many things, changed many things, and varied the decree now into this form, now into that, until he should bring it to that perfection which he did bring it to, so that it should please all the Fathers. I speak these things as an eyewitness, and I say nothing of the very many private gatherings of chosen men. They were gathered together publicly into one, and each was asked his opinion upon everything —

Latin	English
	now the Fathers of the Council alone, now the Theologians in the presence of the Fathers — more times, I think, than
(the page ends here, mid-sentence; the sentence continues on fol. 5v = PDF 74, not transcribed)	(the page ends here, mid-sentence; the sentence continues on fol. 5v = PDF 74, not transcribed)
BLOCK B — Lib. IX, cap. IV, De distinctione fidei humanae a dubio et opinione, et de uariis gradibus ipsius ### PDF 352 = fol. 144v (with the opening clause and the grade-rubric from PDF 351 = fol. 144r)	BLOCK B — Lib. IX, cap. IV, On the distinction of human faith from doubt and opinion, and on its various grades ### PDF 352 = fol. 144v (with the opening clause and the grade-rubric from PDF 351 = fol. 144r)
— (PDF 351; given only for the rubric and the opening of the grade)	— (PDF 351; given only for the rubric and the opening of the grade)
[...] Quare & aliquam certitudinem fidei humanæ, fortassis non esset improbabile infallibilem prorsus defendere. Secundum locum inter credibilia humana tenent, quæ licet non communi omnium hominum, sed unius aut aliquorum autoritate nituntur, in se tamen aut in suis similibus passim ab	[...] Wherefore it would perhaps not be improbable to maintain that some certitude of human faith too is utterly infallible. The second place among human credibles is held by those things which, although they rest not upon

Latin	English
omnibus ita magno & firmo consensu, ut certa habentur, ut stultum	the common authority of all men but upon that of one or of a few, are nevertheless everywhere held by all, whether in themselves or in things of their kind, with so great and firm a consent, as certain, that they would think it stupid
{head: DE INCERTITVDINE GRATIAE.}	{head: ON THE UNCERTAINTY OF GRACE.}
censeant, & fatuum de eis dubitare. Qualia sunt Episcopos dum ordinant ministros altaris, sacerdotes dum consecrant sacratissimam Eucharistiam, dum Baptizant, dum absoluunt, aut aliquod aliud sacramentum administrant, intentionem habere ordinandi, baptizandi, consecrandi, absoluendi, & faciendi, quod Ecclesia intendit. Tametsi enim hunc uel illum rite suo fungi ministerio, unius aut paucorum auctoritate nitatur, tamen ita passim hæc citra ullam ambiguitatem recipiuntur, & ratio conuictus humani talia haberi efflagitat, ut æquum & iustum sit, omnes fideles, nisi aliqua peculiaris, & uehemens causa dubitandi de eis occurrerit, certam minimeque dubiam	and foolish to doubt them. Such are: that bishops, when they ordain ministers of the altar, and priests, when they consecrate the most holy Eucharist, when they Baptize, when they absolve, or administer any other sacrament, have the intention of ordaining, of baptizing, of consecrating, of absolving, and of doing what the Church intends. For although the fact that this or that man duly performs his ministry rests upon the authority of one or of a few, nevertheless these things are everywhere

Latin	English
fidem ipsis omnibus adhibere. Non enim est uerisimile episcopos uel sacerdotes uelle in re tanta fidelibus illudere, præsertim cum nihil inde ipsis commodi possit accedere, sed multa potius detrimenta & damna. Et stare quidem non potest conscientiarum pax, neque suauitas & tranquillitas conuictus Christianorum, nisi ista, ut certa, & indubitata habeantur. Vnde prudentissime Innocentius. 3. in cap. Veniens de præsbytero non baptizato ita scribit. De illo, qui natus est de Christianis parentibus, & inter Christianos fideliter est conuersatus, tam uiolenter præsumitur, quod fuerit baptizatus, ut hæc præsumptio pro certitudine sit habenda, donec euidentissimis forsitan argumentis contrarium probaretur.	so received, without any ambiguity, and the reason of human life together so demands that such things be held, that it is fair and just that all the faithful — unless some peculiar and vehement cause of doubting about them should arise — should give to them all a certain and in no way doubtful faith. For it is not likely that bishops or priests should wish to mock the faithful in so great a matter, especially since no advantage can come to them thence, but rather many detriments and damages. And indeed the peace of consciences cannot stand, nor the sweetness and tranquillity of Christian life together, unless these things are held as certain and undoubted. Whence most prudently Innocent III, in the chapter Veniens de præsbytero non baptizato, writes thus. Of him who is born of Christian parents, and has lived faithfully among Christians, it is so strongly presumed that he was baptized, that this presumption is to be held for certitude, until perhaps by most evident arguments the contrary should be proved.

Latin	English
(the third grade begins at this point: “Eodemque modo licet non æquali iure, aut ratione, cum multa accipimus beneficia ab aliquo...” — not part of Block B.)	(the third grade begins at this point: “Eodemque modo licet non æquali iure, aut ratione, cum multa accipimus beneficia ab aliquo...” — i.e. “And in the same way, though not by equal right or reason, when we receive many benefits from someone...” — not part of Block B.)
[...]	[...]
BLOCK C — Lib. IX, cap. XXXIX ### PDF 462 = fol. 199v · PDF 463 = fol. 200r · PDF 464 = fol. 200v ### (transcribed continuously and in full, including every printed marginal)	BLOCK C — Lib. IX, cap. XXXIX ### PDF 462 = fol. 199v · PDF 463 = fol. 200r · PDF 464 = fol. 200v ### (rendered continuously and in full, including every printed marginal)

Latin	English
{head: DE INCERTITVDINE GRATIAE.}	{head: ON THE UNCERTAINTY OF GRACE.}
-gis impium. Recipit Deus omnes confugientes ad se. Et nemo melius aut uerius in ipsum confugit, quàm qui facit quod in se est, ut ipsius gratiam obtineat, quique uerè diligit ipsum, & de omnibus in eum patratis offensis serio & ex animo dolet. Et ne sic quispiam de humanissimo & benignissimo omnium domino sentiret, in Deuteronomio palàm dixit. Cunque quæsie- -ris dominum Deum tuum, inuenies illum, si tamen toto corde quæsieris eum, & tota tribulatione animæ tuæ. Et per Salomonem. Ego diligentes me diligo. Et sæpe per prophetas. Conuertimini ad me, & ego conuertar ad uos. Et apertius in Euangelio. Siquis diligit me, diligetur a patre meo. Sed hæc satis in præsentia. Nam alia, quæ hunc magnum, & intolerabilem errorem reuincere magis possunt, in lib.13. placet differre. Alij hoc argumentum enodare se existimant dicentes, fidem non se extendere ad obiecta, quæ sunt in facti contingentia, nondum approbata ab Ecclesia. Sed hoc non est argumentum enodare, sed fortius & magis perplexum, atque, ut ita dicam,	-re impious. God receives all who flee to Him. And no one flees to Him better or more truly than he who does what is in him, that he may obtain His grace, and who truly loves Him, and grieves seriously and from his heart for all the offences committed against Him. And lest anyone should think thus of the most humane and most kindly Lord of all, He said openly in Deuteronomy: And when thou shalt see- -k the Lord thy God, thou shalt find him: yet so, if thou seek him with all thy heart, and all the affliction of thy soul. And through Solomon: I love them that love me. And often through the prophets: Turn ye to me, and I will turn to you. And more openly in the Gospel: If any man love me, he shall be loved of my Father. But these things are

Latin	English
nodosius reddere. Nónne ante approbationem Ecclesię fides in phophetis se extendebat ad assentiendum multis factis contingentibus sibi a Deo reuelatis? Nunquid non etiam per fidem quisque potest, & debet assentiri se esse in gratia, ubi Deus hoc ei reuelaret? Quid opus est approbatione Ecclesię, ut assentiamur illis, quę scimus a Deo esse reuelata? An non peccatores per fidem credunt se esse in odio Dei & extra gratiam ipsius, cum sibi conscij sunt perseuerare se in affectu peccati mortalis? An non patres in Concilio generali per fidem sciunt, illud esse legitimum & generale Concilium, priusquam eam propositionem definiant? Alij hoc argumentum diluere tentarunt dicentes ex una de fide, & alia cognita euidenter, inferri non posse conclusionem de fide. Quod & hac ratione approbabant. Certitudo fidei maior est secundum S. Thom. & Scotum, & alios certitudine euidentię, idque non tantum, ut quidam uir doctus Thomam interpretatur, secundum se, sed etiam quo ad nos & ex parte nostri intellectus & affectus. Certius nanque & firmitus reuelatis a Deo assentimur, quam expertis & demonstratis. Quod quidem	enough for the present. For other matters, which can more fully refute this great and intolerable error, it pleases me to defer to book 13. Others think they untie this argument by saying that faith does not extend itself to objects which lie in the contingency of fact, not yet approved by the Church. But this is not to untie the argument, but to render it stronger and more perplexed, and, so to speak, more knotty. Was not faith in the prophets, before the approbation of the Church, extended to assenting to many contingent facts revealed to them by God? Can not anyone also by faith assent, and is he not bound to assent, that he is in grace, where God should reveal this to him? What need is there of the approbation of the Church, that we should assent to those things which we know to have been

Latin	English
partim a maiore propensione affectus nostri proficiscitur, partim a pleniore Dei auxilio, & concursu fidei infusæ. Cum igitur conclusio certior nequeat esse præmissis, ex quibus infertur, conclusio illata ex una credita & alia euidenti non erit certa certitudine fidei. Et huc fortassis respexit Ioannes Bachonis, cum dixit istam propositionem, Ego sum in gratia, non esse cuiquam de fide, sed posse esse certam certitudine consequente fidem. Neque alio uidetur tendisse quidam uir doctus, qui dixit non censendam esse de fide, sed naturalem potius propositionem, quæ inferri, nequit ex reuelatis, non adiuncta una naturali. Verum ipse adduci in hanc sententiam nullatenus possem, neque dubitare si maxime cuperem, ualerem, quin mihi certum esset ex fide, me esse in gratia, siquidem hoc colligere possem ex una credita & altera mihi euidenti. Et hoc ita esse sic suadeo. Primo. Multæ sunt propositiones de fide, quæ non aliter possunt probari esse de fide, nisi quia sequuntur eui-	revealed by God? Do not sinners believe by faith that they are under the hatred of God and outside His grace, when they are conscious to themselves that they persevere in the affection of mortal sin? Do not the Fathers in a general Council know by faith that it is a legitimate and general Council, before they define that proposition? Others have tried to dissolve this argument by saying that from one premise de fide and another evidently known, a conclusion de fide cannot be inferred. Which they proved also by this reasoning. The certitude of faith is, according to St Thomas and Scotus and others, greater than the certitude of evidence; and that not only, as a certain learned man interprets Thomas, in itself, but also as regards us and on the part of our intellect and affection. For we assent more certainly and more firmly to things revealed by God than to things experienced and demonstrated. Which indeed proceeds partly from the greater propensity of our affection, partly from the fuller help of God and the concurrence of infused faith. Since therefore a conclusion cannot be more certain than the premises from which it is inferred, a conclusion drawn from one premise believed and another evident will not be certain with the certitude of faith. And to this perhaps John Baconthorpe looked, when he said that that proposition, I am in grace, is to no one de fide, but can be certain with a certitude consequent upon faith. Nor does a certain learned man seem to have tended elsewhere, who said that a proposition which cannot be inferred from things revealed

Latin	English

Latin	English
	unless one natural premise is joined to them is to be reckoned not de fide, but rather a natural proposition. But I myself could in no way be brought to this opinion; nor, however much I might wish it, could I doubt that it would be certain to me by faith that I am in grace, if indeed I could gather this from one premise believed and another evident to me. And that this is so I urge thus. Firstly. There are many propositions de fide which cannot otherwise be proved to be de fide, save because they follow evi-
{head: LIB. IX. IN IX. CAP. 200}	{head: BOOK IX. ON CHAP. IX. 200}
-denter ex creditis, cum aliqua saltem propositione euidenti secundum lumen naturale. Et potest hoc ostendi in multis propositionibus de Deo, & de Christo, quæ ab omnibus fidelibus hac ratione recipiuntur, ut certæ, & oppositæ censentur hæreticæ, ut patet de istis, Deus est incorporeus. Deus est	-dently from things believed, together with at least some proposition evident according to the natural light. And this can be shown in many propositions about God and about Christ, which are received by all the

Latin	English
immaterialis. Deus est infinitæ uirtutis. Christus habet cor. Christus habet phlegma. Christus secundum corpus, & secundum animam, & omnia in eis contenta, est sub utraque specie sacramenti Eucharistiæ. Christus sine substantia panis, & uini est sub speciebus panis, & uini, & similibus. Huiusmodi enim propositiones non sunt expressæ in Scripturis, sed ex contentis in eis euidenter deducuntur, saltem cum una euidenti secundum lumen naturale. Quare & Sco. noster peculiariter ostendit hanc propositionem esse de fide, Pater differt realiter a filio, quia infertur ex ista naturaliter euidenti, Omnis generans realiter differt a genito, & ex ista de fide, Pater est generans, & filius est genitus. Idenque patet de propositionibus, quæ dependent a diffinitione Conciliorum generalium, uel Papæ. Omnes enim illæ supponunt istas propositiones. Hoc Concilium est legitime congregatum. Hic Papa est rite, & canonice electus. Quæ quidem non sunt reuelatæ, sed euidenter cognitæ, atque ideo & postea diffinitæ, & ut certæ ex fide receptæ ab illis, qui non habuerunt de earum ueritate euidentiam. Et ipsæ propositiones, quæ	faithful on this ground as certain, and whose opposites are reckoned heretical — as is clear of these: God is incorporeal. God is immaterial. God is of infinite power. Christ has a heart. Christ has phlegm. Christ, according to His body and according to His soul, and all things contained in them, is under either species of the sacrament of the Eucharist. Christ, without the substance of bread and of wine, is under the species of bread and of wine, and the like. For propositions of this sort are not expressed in the Scriptures, but are evidently deduced from what is contained in them, at least together with one premise evident according to the natural light. Wherefore our Scotus in particular shows this proposition to be de fide, The Father differs really from the Son, because it is inferred from this naturally

Latin	English
expresse, & formaliter continentur in Scripturis, saltem ad acquisitionem fidei earum, uidentur in nobis requirere certitudinem istius euidentis. Eccle- -sia diffinit, has esse canonicas scripturas, & pro talibus eas recipit. Non est enim ut plurimum, unde aliunde nobis constet certo, eas esse sacras scripturas, & indubitanter, ut talibus credendum esse in eis contentis, ut incipiamus talem, & tantam fidem eis adhibere. Secundo. Si Petrus baptizet aliquem infantem secundum formam Ecclesie, erit ei certum ex fide, infantem illum esse in gratia. Et hoc non ob aliud, nisi, quia illa sequitur euidenter ex ista credita, omnis baptizatus non ponens obicem baptismo est in gratia, & ex ista euidenti, Iste infans est baptizatus, & non posuit obicem. Tertio. Propositio illata ex una credita, & alia euidenti, est certa, & ineuidens, & assensus illius est certus & ineuidens. Quid ergo illi deest, quo minus censeatur esse de fide? Certa quidem est, quia sequitur ex certis. Ineuidens autem est, quia conclusio sequitur semper debiliorem partem. Et sicut in certitudine exuperat fides scientiam, & certitudo scientie comparata ad certitudinem fidei	evident one, Every begetter differs really from the begotten, and from this one de fide, The Father is begetting, and the Son is begotten. The same is clear of propositions which depend upon the definition of general Councils, or of the Pope. For all those presuppose these propositions. This Council is legitimately convened. This Pope is rightly and canonically elected. Which indeed are not revealed, but evidently known — and therefore afterwards also defined, and received as certain of faith by those who did not have evidence of their truth. And the very propositions which are expressly and formally contained in the Scriptures seem, at least for the acquiring of faith in them, to require in us the certitude of that evident premise. The Chur- -ch defines these to be

Latin	English
imperfecta est, ac propterea conclusio illata ex una de fide & alia euidenti non est ita certa, ac premissa de fide, ita in claritate exuperat euidencia fidem, & imperfectio est, & debilitas fidei, obscuritas, ac propterea necesse est, ut ineuidens sit conclusio illata ex una euidenti & alia de fide. Quarto. Qui per-tinaciter dubitaret de propositione illata euidenter ex una credita, & alia euidenti, esset hereticus. Dubitans enim de consequente, quod scit inferri euidenter ex aliquibus premissis, necesse est, dubitet de altera earum, & cum non possit dubitare de euidenti, neque de consequentia, quę etiam est ei euidens, dubi-	the canonical scriptures, and receives them as such. For there is for the most part no other source whence it may be certainly established for us that they are the sacred scriptures, and that what is contained in them is indubitably to be believed as such, so that we may begin to give them such and so great a faith. Secondly. If Peter should baptize some infant according to the form of the Church, it will be certain to him by faith that that infant is in grace. And this for no other reason, save that it follows evidently from this believed premise, everyone baptized who does not place an obstacle to baptism is in grace, and from this evident one, This infant is baptized, and has not placed an obstacle. Thirdly. A proposition inferred from one premise believed and another evident is certain, and non-evident, and the assent to it is certain and non-evident. What then is wanting to it, to prevent its being reckoned to be de fide? Certain indeed it is, because it follows from certain premises. But non-evident it is, because the conclusion always follows the weaker part. And just as in certitude faith surpasses knowledge, and the certitude of knowledge, compared with the certitude of faith, is imperfect — and therefore a conclusion inferred from one premise de fide and another evident is not so certain as the premise de fide — so in clarity evidence surpasses faith, and obscurity is an imperfection and a weakness of faith; and therefore it is necessary that a conclusion inferred from one evident premise and another de fide be non-evident. Fourthly. Whoever should per- - tinaciously doubt about a proposition evidently inferred from one premise believed and another evident would be a heretic. For one who doubts about a consequent which he knows to be evidently inferred from certain premises must needs doubt about one of them; and since he cannot doubt about the evident one, nor about the consequence, which is likewise evident to him, he would dou-

Latin	English

Latin	English
{head: DE INCERTITVDINE GRATIAE.}	{head: ON THE UNCERTAINTY OF GRACE.}
-taret de credita. Ergo illa propositio, quę inferitur ex una credita, & alia eui- -denti, ab omnibus censenda est, & credenda ex fide. Neque debet quenquam mouere argumentum in contrarium factum. Primo enim non est necesse, omnes assensus de fide concedere esse pares in certitudine. Quoniam quidam solum sunt de fide, quia inferuntur ex alijs, & propter unumquodque tale, & illud magis, ut habet regula posterioristica. Et cum dicitur assensus fidei certior esse quocunque assensu scientifico, uel	-bt about the one believed. Therefore that proposition which is inferred from one premise believed and another evi- -dent is by all to be reckoned, and to be believed, of faith. Nor ought the argument made to the contrary move anyone. For first, it is not necessary to concede that all assents de fide are equal in certitude. Since some are de fide only because they are

Latin	English
euidenti, non summe, limitari potest hoc ad assensus fidei, qui non pendent a propositionibus scientificis, uel euidentibus. Nam quia conclusio certior esse nequit suis præmissis, quatenus ab eis pendet, consentaneum uidetur, ut propositiones, quæ solum sunt de fide, quia inferuntur ex una de fide & altera euidenti non sint certiores illa euidenti, a cuius certitudine pendet sua certitudo. Deinde. Eo ipso, quod agnoscitur a nobis aliqua propositio euidenter sequi ex una credita, & alia euidenti, quia mox agnoscitur esse de fide, & consequenter inniti reuelationi & ueritati infallibili, nos ei certius ex pia affectione assentiemur, quam propositioni euidenti. Et assensus illius partim a pia affectione nostra, partim a fide infusa accipiet aliquos gradus certitudinis, præter illos, quos haberet ex præmissarum, & consequentiæ certitudine, & per eos exuperabit certitudinem propositionis euidētis. Itaque ex hac parte nihil illi deerit quo minus censeri possit esse de fide. Atque hoc modo possent omnes propositiones, siue assensus de fide defendi æqualiter esse certi, sicut & in nobis uidemur experiri. Non est enim inconueniens conclusionem esse	inferred from others; and that on account of which each thing is such, is itself more so, as the rule of the Posterior Analytics has it. And when it is said that the assent of faith is more certain than any scientific assent whatever, or any evident one that is not supremely so, this can be limited to those assents of faith which do not depend upon scientific or evident propositions. For since a conclusion cannot be more certain than its premises, in so far as it depends upon them, it seems consistent that propositions which are de fide only because they are inferred from one premise de fide and another evident should not be more certain than that evident one, upon whose certitude their certitude depends. Next. By the very fact that some proposition is recognized by us to follow evidently from æqualiter cer- -tam, aut certiore, quam sint principia, ex quibus infertur, si ab extrinseco, & aliunde quam ex præmissis, habeat aliquos gradus certitudinis per quos exæquet, aut uincat certitudinem eorum, sicut continget in proposito propter concursum fidei infusæ, & pię affectionis ad assensum conclusionis. Di- -cet aliquis. Certum ex fide non pendet a propositione, cui possit subesse falsum. Sed certitudini euidentiæ non summæ potest subesse falsum. Per hoc enim differt euidencia non summa, a summa, quia nemo potest decipi assentiendo summe euidentibus, potest uero subesse deceptio in assensu euiden- -tium non summe. Verum hæc obiectio procedit ex praua intelligentia differentiæ, quæ est inter euidenciam summam, & non summam. Non enim differt euidencia non summa a summa quia per euidenciam non summam possit quis decipi. De ratione enim euidentiæ cuiuscunque est, per eam non posse quenquam decipi, neque possibile est, ut quod euidens est, falsum sit. Et quicunque euidenciam habet de aliqua ueritate, certus est non se decipi in assensu illius. Differt autem euidencia non summa a summa, quia euidencia

Latin

English

one premise believed and another evident — since it is at once recognized to be de fide, and consequently to rest upon revelation and infallible truth — we shall assent to it more certainly, out of pious affection, than to the evident proposition. And the assent to it will receive, partly from our pious affection, partly from infused faith, some degrees of certitude beyond those which it would have from the certitude of the premises and of the consequence; and through these it will surpass the certitude of the evident proposition. And so on this side nothing will be wanting to it, to prevent its being reckoned to be of faith. And in this way all propositions, or assents, de fide could be maintained to be equally certain, as we also seem to experience in ourselves. For it is not unfitting that a conclusion

Latin	English
summa est de propositionibus, quarum significata non contingit aliter se habere, & in quarum assensu nemo potest decipi. Evidentia autem non summa est de eiusmodi propositionibus, quæ falsæ possunt esse, & in quarum assensu quis potest decipi, etiam cum putat se habere de eis evidentiam. Quemadmodum uero non est inconueniens aliquas propositiones esse de fide, quæ quidem secundum se possunt esse	should be equally cer- -tain, or more certain, than the principles from which it is inferred, if from without, and from some source other than the premises, it has some degrees of certitude by which it equals or overcomes their certitude — as happens in the case proposed, on account of the concurrence of infused faith and of pious affection towards the assent of the conclusion. Someone will sa- -y: What is certain by faith does not depend upon a proposition beneath which the false can lie. But beneath the certitude of non-supreme evidence the false can lie. For non-supreme evidence differs from supreme in this, that no one can be deceived in assenting to things supremely evident, whereas deception can lie beneath assent to things evident not supremely. But this objection proceeds from a wrong understanding of the difference which is between supreme and non-supreme evidence. For non-supreme evidence does not differ from supreme because through non-supreme evidence someone can be deceived. For it belongs to the very notion of any evidence whatever that through it no one can be deceived; nor is it possible that what is evident should be false. And whoever has evidence of some truth is certain that he is not deceived in his assent to it. But non-supreme evidence differs from supreme, because supreme evidence is of propositions whose significates cannot be otherwise, and in the assent to which no one can be deceived. But non-supreme evidence is of propositions of such a kind as can be false, and in the assent to which one can be deceived, even when he thinks that he has evidence of them. But just as it is not unfitting that some propositions should be de fide which indeed in themselves can be {catchword: falsæ ,}	{catchword: falsæ ,}

Latin	English

Latin	English
(the sentence is completed on fol. 201r = PDF 465: “ falsæ, sed non quatenus subsunt diuinæ reuelationi, ita neque incommodum ullum censi debet... ”)	(the sentence is completed on fol. 201r = PDF 465: “ falsæ, sed non quatenus subsunt diuinæ reuelationi, ita neque incommodum ullum censi debet... ” — i.e. “false, but not in so far as they lie under divine revelation, so neither ought anything to be reckoned a difficulty...”)
BLOCK D — Lib. IX, cap. XLI	BLOCK D — Lib. IX, cap. XLI
D.1 — PDF 476 = fol. 206v	D.1 — PDF 476 = fol. 206v
{head: DE INCERTITVDINE GRATIAE. }	{head: ON THE UNCERTAINTY OF GRACE. }
[...]	[...]
Quare cum istæ opiniones damnatę non sint ab Ecclesia, licet oppositę sint multo probabiliore, non est, unde magis certitudo fidei de gratia nostra possit	Wherefore, since those opinions have not been condemned by the Church, although the opposite ones

Latin	English
colligi propter suscepta sacramenta, quam propter nostras dispositiones. Vtque radicitus totum hoc argumentum subruamus & eneruamus, dico tandem, etiam si certum sit ex fide ad gratiam sufficere cum sacramento Baptismi uel Pœnitentiæ, qualencunque pœnitentiam peccatorum, cum proposito seruandi mandata, & uoluntate suscipiendi Baptismum, adhuc tamen non sequitur nobis posse certam esse ex fide nostram gratiam. Quanquam enim cuius potest constare euidenter, an ista habeat, nec ne, nemini tamen certum esse potest ex fide, uel euidenter, ut c.17. tradidimus, se esse uere Baptizatum, uel absolutum. Quia requiritur adhæc sacramenta & alia omnia conficienda intentio faciendi quod Ecclesia facit, ut apertissime diffinitum est in Concilio Florentino, & in sessione. 7. nostri huius concilij, can. 11. de sacramentis in genere. De intentione autem ista nullus potest absque diuina reuelatione certus esse per	are much more probable, there is no ground whence the certitude of faith concerning our grace could be gathered any more on account of the sacraments received than on account of our dispositions. And that we may undermine and enervate this whole argument at the root, I say finally that even if it were certain by faith that, together with the sacrament of Baptism or of Penance, a repentance for sins of whatever sort suffices for grace, with the purpose of keeping the commandments and the will to receive Baptism, still it does not follow that our grace can be certain to us by faith. For although it can be evidently established for anyone whether he has these things or not, yet it can be certain to no one, by faith or evidently, as we set forth in chapter 17, that he is truly Baptized, or absolved.

Latin	English
	Because there is required, for the confecting of these sacraments and of all the others, the intention of doing what the Church does, as has been most plainly defined in the Council of Florence, and in session 7 of this our council, canon 11, on the sacraments in general. But of that intention no one can be certain, without divine revelation, by {catchword: fidem ,}	{catchword: fidem ,}
(the sentence continues on fol. 207r = PDF 477: “ fidem ...”)	(the sentence continues on fol. 207r = PDF 477: “ fidem ...”, i.e. “ faith ...”)
D.2 — PDF 485 = fol. 211r	D.2 — PDF 485 = fol. 211r
{head: LIB. IX. IN IX. CAP. 211 }	{head: BOOK IX. ON CHAP. IX. 211 }
[Quan]tuncunque legitime uideatur quis fuisse ordinatus, si tamen euidenter postea constiterit, eum non fuisse baptizatum in forma Ecclesiæ, quia non recepit characterem baptismalem, baptizandus est iterum, iuxta definitionem In- -noc. 3. & concilij apud Compendium, & omnibus denuo	[Howe]ver lawfully a man may seem to have been ordained, if nevertheless it afterwards evidently appears that he was not baptized in the form of the Church, then, because he did not receive the baptismal character, he

Latin	English
initiandus ordinibus, ut possit in sacerdotio ministrare. Præterea. Quantuncunque aliquis baptizatus crederet, & uellet recipere ordines ab episcopo, qui talis communiter existimatur, si tamen casu aliquo aut malicia episcopi uel alterius, uel ipse episcopus non esset episcopus, uel non habuisset aliquam intentionem ordinandi eum, & hoc postea pro certo constaret, absque dubio iterum ordinandus esset, ut esset sacerdos, & ut communiter tradunt doctores thæologi, quidquid senserint aliqui ex canonistis, nec ille conse- -crasset eo tempore Eucharistiam, neque absoluisset quenquam, quippe qui nullam uere potestatem habuisset idoneam ad hæc præstandum. Quod si fides sacramenti non supplet uicem sacramenti, quo ad characterem, & præsentiam corporis Christi in Eucharistia, unde nobis uel probabiliter promittamus supplere quoad remissionem culpæ & pene? Sed hactenus de certitudine ex susceptis sacramentis.	must be baptized again, according to the definition of In- -nocent III and of the council at Compiègne, and must be initiated afresh into all the orders, that he may be able to minister in the priesthood. Moreover. However much a baptized man might believe and might wish to receive orders from a bishop who is commonly reputed such, if nevertheless, by some chance or by the malice of the bishop or of another, either the bishop himself were not a bishop, or he had not had any intention of ordaining him, and this were afterwards established for certain, he would beyond doubt have to be ordained again, in order to be a priest; and, as the doctors of theology commonly teach, whatever some of the canonists may have held, neither would he have conse- -crated the

Latin	English
	Eucharist at that time, nor absolved anyone, inasmuch as he would truly have had no power fit for performing these things. But if faith in the sacrament does not supply the place of the sacrament as regards the character and the presence of the body of Christ in the Eucharist, whence should we promise ourselves, even probably, that it supplies as regards the remission of guilt and of punishment? But thus far concerning certitude from the sacraments received.
{Immediately following, the chapter heading: “De incertitudine innocentiae. Cap. XLII.” — end of cap. XLI.}	{Immediately following, the chapter heading: “De incertitudine innocentiae. Cap. XLII.” — i.e. “On the uncertainty of innocence. Chap. XLII.” — end of cap. XLI.}
BLOCK E — Lib. IX, cap. XLVI ### PDF 495 = fol. 216r (concluding word on PDF 496 = fol. 216v)	BLOCK E — Lib. IX, cap. XLVI ### PDF 495 = fol. 216r (concluding word on PDF 496 = fol. 216v)
{head: LIB. IX. IN IX. CAP. 216}

Latin	English
	{head: BOOK IX. ON CHAP. IX. 216}
[...]	[...]
(lead-in, for the sense:) Primo. Tam fortia occurrere possunt argumenta, quę suadeant spiritalibus uiris suam iustificationem, quam sunt illa, quę suadent alia, quę omnes censent, & posse, & debere a nobis certo credi, & absque ulla formidine. Credimus enim certo omnes Christiani ex parentibus Christianis orti, & inter Christianos educati, nos esse baptizatos, neque uel minimam habent nisi rarissimi, & scrupulosissimi ea de re formidinem. Idenque & de quibuscunque alijs similibus ita firmiter pręsumimus, ut ea pręsumptio merito pro certitudine sit habenda, sicut supra ex Innocentio. 3. docuimus. Credimus etiam omnes sacerdo- -tes absque ulla hęsitatione, nos esse ordinatos ab episcopis, qui nos exterius ordinarunt. Eadenque certitudine credimus sacerdotes consecrare uerę Eucharistiam, quotiescunque altaris sacrificio assistimus, tametsi neque euidenter, neque per diuinam reuelationem constet nobis intentio uel episcopi ordinantis, uel sacerdotis baptizantis,	(lead-in, for the sense:) Firstly. Arguments can present themselves as strong to persuade spiritual men of their own justification as are those which persuade of other things which all judge both can and ought to be believed by us for certain, and without any fear. For we Christians, all of us sprung from Christian parents and brought up among Christians, believe for certain that we are baptized, nor have any but the rarest and most scrupulous even the least fear on that head. And the same we presume so firmly of any other like matters whatsoever, that that presumption is deservedly to be held for certitude, as we taught above out of Innocent III. We prie- -sts also all believe, without any hesitation, that we were

Latin	English
aut consecrantis, quam certo scimus per fidem, ad conficiendum ista sacramenta esse necessariam. Neque est qui temeritatis, uel præcipationis notam ob ista cuiquam inurat, immo omnes culpabile esse censent de aliquo istorum, nisi grauissimis de causis, uel tantillulum	ordained by the bishops who outwardly ordained us. And with the same certitude we believe that priests truly consecrate the Eucharist, as often as we assist at the sacrifice of the altar, although neither evidently nor by divine revelation is the intention established for us — whether of the ordaining bishop, or of the baptizing or consecrating priest — which we certainly know by faith to be necessary for the confecting of these sacraments. Nor is there anyone who would brand any man with the mark of rashness or of precipitancy on this account; nay, all judge it to be culpable, concerning any of these things, unless for causes of the greatest weight, even in the very least degree,
{head: DE INCERTITVDINE GRATIAE.}	{head: ON THE UNCERTAINTY OF GRACE.}

Latin	English
hesitare. Quod autem tam grauia queant subesse iustis argumenta, ut credant se esse iustificatos, quam sunt illa, quę faciunt nos certo credere, et episcopos & sacerdotes habere, dum conficiunt & conferunt hęc sacramenta intentio- -nem debitam, exemplo uno possumus facere dilucidum. Videt se Anto- [...]	to hesitate. But that arguments as weighty can underlie the just, so that they believe themselves to be justified, as are those which make us believe for certain that both bishops and priests have, when they confect and confer these sacraments, the due inten- -tion, we can make clear by a single example. He sees himself, Anto- [...]
[...]	[...]