

Gretser 1607

Defensio Controversiarum Bellarmini — Felix II and Liberius: recognition legitimates a pope (Excerpta)

by Jakob Gretser, S.J. (1562–1625); Defensio of Bellarmine's Controversies, Ingolstadt 1607–1609 (= Opera omnia, tomi VIII–IX)

Online Location of Text Here

- Pivotal passages, verified against the page images in the owner's bellarmine-defenses corpus (July 2026): Tom. II, cols. 531–532 (the agnitus-et-palam-habitus text, print-verified) and cols. 1045–1052 (the Felix II mechanism, agent-verified against the rendered pages).
- Last Edit: July 15, 2026.
- Version: 1.0
- Selection: the Felix II / Liberius cluster, with the external-forum principle

Note on this selection: recognition-legitimation applied to a pope, defended against the Protestant controversialist Sutcliffe. Felix II entered by an election Gretser concedes was vitiosus — an imperial intrusion while Liberius lived. Gretser's resolution: when Liberius fell (communicating with the Arians), Felix “was acknowledged and openly held as legitimate Pontiff” — and from that time “Felix was MADE legitimate Pope... and remained true Pontiff to the end of his life.” The mechanism is the external forum: the Church judges by what is public — “for men are not bound to, nor can they, search hearts, but judge what is external” — the papal twin of Bellarmine's De Conciliis II.9 rule (“whatever may lie hidden in their hearts”) and a seventeenth-century anticipation of this repository's §X argument on the intention of the elect: no interior state, of elector or elect, can defeat the public constitution of the title. Gretser thus witnesses the cause-version of the fact-guarantee (recognition makes the pope) two decades before Castro Palao's sanatio and a century before Pallavicino's second-election theory. Classification: School 1 (cause; note unassigned). The datum that even schismatic emperors venerated their antipopes “as Vicars of Christ” — conceding the office itself while mistaking its occupant — completes the picture: the acceptance-criterion was so native to the Christian mind that even its abusers presupposed it.

Tom. II, cols. 531–532 and 1045–1052 — the Felix II / Liberius cluster [Against Sutcliffe, on Felix II:] Although the entry of Felix was faulty; afterwards, however, when Liberius began to communicate with the Arians, he was acknowledged and openly held as legitimate Pontiff.

[On the same, at greater length:] Bellarmine says that Felix was not legitimate Pontiff until the fall of Liberius. [...] And from that time Felix was made legitimate Pope [...] and Felix remained true Pontiff to the end of his life.

[On the mechanism — the external forum:] [Deposition is possible only] on account of the external appearance of heresy [...] for men are not bound to, nor can they, search hearts, but judge what is external.

[Adjacent datum:] Even schismatic emperors venerated their antipopes as Vicars of Christ.