

Bartis — Nucleus Theologiae Scholasticae ex Secunda Secundae (Prague 1731)

Latin–English parallel text: Tract. I, Disp. I, Q. I, Sect. I, Subsectio IV entire, §§ 54–67 (printed 57–76), with two excerpts from printed 158 and 166

Latin	English
BLOCK A — Subsectio IV (printed 57–76)	BLOCK A — Subsectio IV (printed 57–76)
SUBSECTIO IV.	SUBSECTION IV.
An inter cætera Fidei Theologicæ objecta materialia sit etiam, Summum Pontificem, p. t. regnantem, esse verum Pontificem.	Whether among the other material objects of Theological Faith there is also this: that the Supreme Pontiff, reigning for the time being, is a true Pontiff.
54. CErtum est: quòd sit remotum, ceu revelabile, si non revelatum, idque semper intrinsecè, ità, ut non possit unquam fieri irrevelabile, nisi extrinsecè, atque adeò saltèm remotè semper credibile, si non proximè, ùt liquet ex præced. subsect. Sed dubium est: num sit objectum proximum, seu non solùm revelabile, sed etiam revelatum, atque adeò proximè credibile, & defacto de fide: quòd Summus Pontifex, p. t. regnans, legitimè electus, & pacificè à tota Ecclesia acceptatus, absque justa contradictione, atque ità, ut legitimè, sic pacificè suum Pontificatum possidens, neque eidem authenticè renuntians, (qualem suspicimus hodie Sanctissimum D. Clementem XII.) sit verus Pontifex, D. Petri Successor, & Supremus Christi Vicarius in terris? In ordine ad quod resolvendum in præsent. subsect.	54. It is certain that it is a remote object, as being revealable if not revealed, and that always intrinsically, so that it can never become unrevealable except extrinsically, and therefore that it is always at least remotely credible, if not proximately, as is clear from the preceding subsection. But it is doubtful whether it is a proximate object, that is, not only revealable but also revealed, and therefore proximately credible and in fact of faith, namely this: that the Supreme Pontiff reigning for the time being, legitimately elected and peacefully accepted by the whole Church, without just contradiction, and thus possessing his Pontificate as legitimately so peacefully, and not authentically renouncing it (such as we look up to today the most holy lord Clement XII), is a true Pontiff, the successor of blessed Peter, and the Supreme Vicar of Christ on earth. With a view to settling this in the present subsection:
55. Prænoto primò: Quòd revelatio, quantum ad præsens, sit, alia formalis explicita, alia formalis implicita, alia virtualis implicita. Formalis explicita revelatio est: quando aliqua veritas expressè à DEO est manifestata, seu per scripturam, seu per traditionem, ùt: DEUM esse unum, & trinum, Christum esse Filium DEI, & hominis, &c. Revelatio deinde formalis implicita est: quando in una veritate, revelata explicitè, continetur altera, aut saltèm cum illa connectitur ista, essentialiter, ùt in definito continetur definitio, in propositione universali continetur propositio particularis, & mons connectitur cum valle, &c. Revelatio denique virtualis implicita est: quando in una veritate, revelata explicitè, continetur altera solummodo realiter, puta, in essentia proprietas, ùt in homine risibilitas, flebilis, &c. Porrò ad	55. I note first: that revelation, so far as concerns the present matter, is of three kinds: one formal explicit, another formal implicit, another virtual implicit. Formal explicit revelation is when some truth has been expressly manifested by God, whether through Scripture or through tradition, as: that God is one and triune, that Christ is the Son of God and of man, etc. Next, formal implicit revelation is when in one truth, explicitly revealed, another is contained, or at least the latter is connected with the former essentially, as the definition is contained in the thing defined, and the particular proposition is contained in the universal proposition, and a mountain is connected with a valley, etc. Finally, virtual implicit revelation is when in one truth, explicitly revealed, another is contained only really, for instance a property in an essence, as risibility, the capacity for weeping, etc., in man. Further, to determine the proximate matter of faith, formal explicit revelation is not determinandam fidei materiam proximam non requiritur necessariò formalis explicita revelatio, sed sufficit formalis implicita, per infallibilem conclusionem deducibilis ex revelatione formali explicita, licèt non sufficiat virtualis implicita, ùt interim præsuppono ex Sect. 2. debitè expositurus idipsum in Sect. ejusdem Subsect. 5. atque adeò omnis propositio revelata formaliter, seu explicitè, seu implicitè, licèt nulla propositio revelata tantummodo virtualiter, est fidei Theologicæ objectum materiale proximum, & de fide. Ulteriùs

Latin

56. Prænoto secundò: quòd hæc propositio: omnis Pontifex legitimè electus, & pacificè ab Ecclesia acceptatus, est verus Pontifex, & Supremum Caput visibile militantis Ecclesiæ, Vicarium Christi, tam in dogmatico, quàm in sensu politico, in persona nominata complectente personas innominatas, æquipollet propositioni huic: Tu es Petrus, & super hanc Petram adifecabo[1] Ecclesiam meam. Matth. 16. Et ratio est: quia aliàs, nisi sub sensu litterali persona historica Petri intelligeretur in sensu spirituali persona mystica Petri, id est, omnis Pontifex, legitimè electus, & pacificè ab Ecclesia acceptatus, non esset vera promissio illa Christi, quæ tamen non potest esse falsa, utpote ab æterna veritate facta, immediatè quidem Apostolis mediatè autem toti Ecclesiæ militanti: Ego vobiscum sum usque ad consummationem sæculi. Matth. 18.[2] utique non per se ipsum, proportionatò nempe modò d. Ecclesiæ, nimirum visibiliter, neque in persona Petri historica: ergo in quolibet legitimè electo, & pacificè ab Ecclesia acceptato Pontifice, tanquam in persona Petri mystica, & suo in terris Vicario; ut enim visibilem instituit Ecclesiam militantem, sic eam voluit etiam per visibilia gubernari Capita usque ad finem mundi: alioquin neque Petrò fuisset opus, si eam voluisset gubernatam invisibiliter. Ac proinde sic illa propositio: omnis Pontifex legitimè electus, & pacificè ab Ecclesia acceptatus, &c. Sicut propositio ista: Tu es Petrus, &c. utpote æquivalens una alteri, revelata est formaliter explicitè locò præcit. nempe Matth. 16. Et consequenter ex propositæ q. suppositò, quòd Summus Pontifex p. t. regnans, sit legitimè electus, & pacificè ab Ecclesia acceptatus, &c. ut omnem in communi explicitè, sic talem in particulari formaliter implicitè, revelatum est, esse verum Pontificem, D. Petri Successorem, &c. Ultimàtè necessarily required, but formal implicit revelation suffices, deducible by an infallible conclusion from formal explicit revelation, although virtual implicit revelation does not suffice, as for the moment I presuppose from Section 2, being about to expound this same point duly in Subsection 5 of the same Section. And therefore every proposition revealed formally, whether explicitly or implicitly, though no proposition revealed only virtually, is a proximate material object of Theological Faith, and of faith. Further:

English

56. I note secondly: that this proposition — every Pontiff legitimately elected and peacefully accepted by the Church is a true Pontiff, and the Supreme visible Head of the Church militant, the Vicar of Christ — both in the dogmatic and in the political sense, in a named person comprehending unnamed persons, is equivalent to this proposition: Thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build[1] my Church. Matth. 16. And the reason is this: because otherwise, unless under the literal sense of the historical person of Peter there were understood, in the spiritual sense, the mystical person of Peter, that is, every Pontiff legitimately elected and peacefully accepted by the Church, that promise of Christ would not be true — a promise which nevertheless cannot be false, since it was made by eternal truth, immediately indeed to the Apostles, but mediately to the whole Church militant: I am with you all days, even to the consummation of the world. Matth. 18.[2] And certainly He is with her not through Himself, that is, in the manner proportioned to the said Church, namely visibly, nor in the historical person of Peter: therefore in every Pontiff legitimately elected and peacefully accepted by the Church, as in the mystical person of Peter and His Vicar on earth. For as He instituted the Church militant as visible, so He also willed her to be governed by visible Heads until the end of the world; otherwise there would have been no need even of Peter, if He had willed her to be governed invisibly. And accordingly that proposition, every Pontiff legitimately elected and peacefully accepted by the Church, etc., just like this proposition, Thou art Peter, etc. — the one being equivalent to the other — is revealed formally explicitly in the place just cited, namely Matth. 16. And consequently, on the supposition of the question proposed, that the Supreme Pontiff reigning for the time being is legitimè elected and peacefully accepted by the Church, etc., then, as of every such Pontiff in general it is revealed explicitly, so of this one in particular it is revealed formally implicitly, that he is a true Pontiff, the successor of blessed Peter, etc. Lastly:

Latin

57. Prænoto tertiò: Quòd detur omnino potestas in Ecclesia eligendi, & acceptandi Summum Pontificem, ùt probat continuus Ecclesiæ usus, in suavi, ac infallibili providentia divina, Ecclesiam regente, fundatus, quò à principio deligebat, & acceptabat ejusmodi Caput visibile, ac deligit, & acceptat defacto, atque delectura, & acceptura est usque ad consummationem sæculi, juxta eum modum, quem vidit, & videt, visuráque est accommodum: uti à principio quidem adhibita totius Cleri Romani, ac Vicinorum Romæ Episcoporum votatione, eaque exhibita, præstolando insuper populi consensum, non quidem permodum suffragii, sed permodum testimonii de neo-electi vita, ac moribus; ex postfacto autem, ubi auctus esset plusculum Cleri Romani numerus, adhibita votatione pauciorum ex eodem ad id deputatorum, antea Regionariorum, à 14. Urbis Romanæ regionibus, quibus singuli erant præfecti, postea Cardinalium à Sylvestro I. quasi Cardinum Ecclesiæ, nuncupatorum: quos Innocentiùs IV. rubrò insignivit galerò, ut monerentur eò, non dubitare, profundendum sanguinem suum esse, pro libertate Ecclesiæ; defacto autem adhibita votatione eorundem quidem Cardinalium, sed in auctiore numero, idque, ex constitutione Alexandri III. requisitis ad electionem validam duabus suffragiorum, seu votorum, tertiis. S. Petrus quidem ipse delegit sibi Successorem, D. Clementem; Ecclesia tamen non acceptavit hanc electionem, sed elegit, & acceptavit S. Linum: quamvis ipsomet etiam D. Clemente, factæ sui à S. Petro delectioni, renuntiante, teste D. Epiphanio. Ex quo licet eruere, quòd tametsi competat Pontifici, utpote totius Ecclesiæ Capiti, eum ordinare modum novi Pontificis eligendi, quem judicaverit congruum, ità, ut exigente id necessitate ac utilitate, in aliquo casu extraordinario, possit ipse etiam deligere sibi (ex mente Eximii Suarezii) Successorem; nihilominus loquendo de cursu ordinario, sicut non est post S. Petrum attentata ejusmodi electio, sic neque imposterum facilè est ab ullo Pontifice attentanda, nisi, ùt dixi, in aliquo casu extraordinario; nè alioqui hæreditate possideretur Sanctuarium DEI. Et licèt etiam, exemplò S. Petri, deligeret sibi ipse Pontifex Successorem suum, adhuc posset Ecclesia, exemplò non acceptati Clementis, & substituti Lini, non acceptare eum, sed substituere alium; uti quòvis modo electum, & nondum

English

57. I note thirdly: that there is altogether in the Church a power of electing and accepting the Supreme Pontiff, as the continuous usage of the Church proves, a usage founded in that sweet and infallible divine providence which governs the Church; by which usage she from the beginning chose and accepted such a visible Head, and in fact does choose and accept one, and will choose and accept one until the consummation of the world, according to that manner which she has seen, and sees, and will see to be suitable. Thus at the beginning the vote of the whole Roman clergy and of the bishops neighboring on Rome was employed, and once that vote had been given, the consent of the people was further awaited, not indeed by way of a suffrage, but by way of a testimony concerning the life and morals of the newly elected. Afterwards, when the number of the Roman clergy had grown somewhat larger, the vote of a smaller number deputed from that same clergy for this purpose was employed: earlier these were the Regionarii, named from the fourteen regions of the city of Rome, over each of which one of them was set; later they were called Cardinals by Sylvester I, as being, so to speak, the hinges (cardines) of the Church. Innocent IV distinguished them with the red hat, so that they might be warned by it not to hesitate that their own blood must be poured out for the liberty of the Church. But at present the vote of these same Cardinals is employed, though in a larger number, and this by the constitution of Alexander III, two thirds of the suffrages, or votes, being required for a valid election. St. Peter himself indeed chose a successor for himself, blessed Clement; the Church, however, did not accept this election, but elected and accepted St. Linus — although blessed Clement himself also renounced the choice of him made by St. Peter, as blessed Epiphanius testifies. From this it may be gathered that, although it belongs to the Pontiff, as Head of the whole Church, to lay down that manner of electing a new Pontiff which he judges fitting, so that, when necessity and utility demand it, in some extraordinary case he may even choose a successor for himself (according to the mind of the Eminent Suárez), nevertheless, speaking of the ordinary course, as no such election has been attempted since St. Peter, so neither is such an election lightly to be attempted hereafter by any Pontiff, except, as I said, in some extraordinary case, lest otherwise the sanctuary of God be possessed by inheritance. And even if, after the example of St. Peter, a Pontiff should himself choose his own successor, the Church could still, after the example of Clement who was not accepted and of Linus who was substituted, not accept him but substitute another; just as she can repudiate anyone elected in whatever manner and not acceptatum, potest repudiare: cùm electio non habeat se nisi permodum dispositivæ conditionis ad designandam personam Pontificiam intento fine frustrabilis, & consequenter in eodem obtinendo fallibilis, ùt dicam infrà n. 61. ubi dicam etiam, quòd acceptatio è contra totius Ecclesiæ, tanquam columna veritatis, habens se instar formalis designationis personæ Pontificiæ, tanquam necessarii Capitis sui, sinè quò tam parum potest visibiliter perennare, quàm parùm quodlibet corpus aliud sinè suo, non possit esse nisi infrustrabilis, & infallibilis. Quibus prænotatis, facilè est colligere q. propositæ resolutionem, quàm ponens,

Latin

58. Dico: Inter cætera Fidei Theologicæ objecta materialia proxima, ac proinde defacto de fide, est, Summum Pontificem p. t. regnantem, legitimè electum, & pacificè ab Ecclesia acceptatum, atque ità, ùtùt legitimè, sic pacificè suum Pontificatum possidentem, neque eidem authenticè renuntiantem, (talem reveremur hodiernum Clementem XII.) esse verum Pontificem, D. Petri Successorem, & Supremum Caput visibile totius Ecclesiæ militantis, seu, quod est idem, Summum Christi Vicarium in terris. Ità cum P. Suarez hodie communis, imò jam à t. Clementis VIII. ùt testatur Oviedo, unanimis Theologorum, contra Cajetanum, Turrecrematam, Banezium, & alios nonnullos. P. 1. autoritate SS. Conciliorum, ac præprimis constantiensis, ubi expressata habetur Bulla Martini V. in qua constituitur, ut hæretici, Ecclesiæ reconciliari volentes, interrogentur, utrum credant Papam, canonicè electum, qui p. t. fuerit, (exprimendo ejus nomen,) esse Successorem Petri, & habere Supremam potestatem in Ecclesia DEI: ergo supponit idem Martinus V. Pontifex Maximus, inter cætera Fidei Theologicæ objecta materialia, eaque proxima, esse, Papam, canonicè electum: aliàs non exigeret id ab hæreticis, Ecclesiæ reconciliandis, credendum; & quidem non solùm in communi, sed etiam in particulari, imò in singulari, seu individuo, ùt indicant adducta Bullæ verba: qui pro tempore fuerit; ac præsertim intrà parenthesesim collocata: exprimendo ejus nomen. Idem sentiunt alia, quæ regnantes p. t. Pontifices, ùt ipsa agnoverunt, sic fidelibus proposuerunt, credendos, tanquam Vicarios Christi, quemadmodum Chalcedonense Leonem IV. Milevitanum Innocentium III. Tridentinum Pium IV. P. secundò yet accepted. For the election stands only by way of a dispositive condition for designating the person of the Pontiff, a condition that can be frustrated of its intended end and consequently is fallible in obtaining that end, as I shall say below at § 61. There I shall also say that, on the contrary, the acceptance by the whole Church, as the pillar of truth, standing as the formal designation of the person of the Pontiff as her necessary Head — without whom she can as little endure visibly as any other body can endure without its own head — cannot be otherwise than unfrustrable and infallible. These things being noted beforehand, it is easy to gather the resolution of the question proposed; and setting it down,

English

58. I say: Among the other proximate material objects of Theological Faith, and therefore in fact of faith, is this: that the Supreme Pontiff reigning for the time being, legitimately elected and peacefully accepted by the Church, and thus possessing his Pontificate as legitimately so peacefully, and not authentically renouncing it (such we revere today's Clement XII to be), is a true Pontiff, the successor of blessed Peter, and the Supreme visible Head of the whole Church militant, or, what is the same, the Supreme Vicar of Christ on earth. So, with Fr. Suárez, holds the common opinion today — indeed, already from the time of Clement VIII, as Oviedo testifies, the unanimous opinion of theologians — against Cajetan, Torquemada, Bañez, and some others. Proof 1, from the authority of the holy Councils, and above all of Constance, where the Bull of Martin V is set out, in which it is laid down that heretics wishing to be reconciled to the Church are to be asked whether they believe that the Pope canonically elected, whoever he shall be for the time being (expressing his name), is the successor of Peter and has supreme power in the Church of God. Therefore the same Martin V, Supreme Pontiff, supposes that among the other material objects of Theological Faith, and among the proximate ones, is this: the Pope canonically elected; otherwise he would not require this to be believed by heretics who are to be reconciled to the Church. And this not only in general, but also in particular, indeed in the singular, that is, in the individual, as the adduced words of the Bull indicate: whoever he shall be for the time being, and especially those placed within the parenthesis: expressing his name. Other Councils hold the same, which, as they themselves acknowledged the Pontiffs reigning for the time being, so proposed them to the faithful as men to be believed to be Vicars of Christ: as Chalcedon did Leo IV, Mileve Innocent III, Trent Pius IV. Proof 2, by theological reason: every truth formally implicitly revealed is a proximate ratione Theologica: omnis veritas, formaliter implicitè revelata, est fidei Theologicæ objectum materiale proximum, & de fide, juxta prænot. 1. atqui talis veritas est, Summum Pontificem p. t. regnantem, legitimè electum, & pacificè acceptatum, &c. esse verum Pontificem, D. Petri Successorem, & Summum Christi Vicarium in terris, juxta prænot. 2. ergo.

Latin

59. Confirm. primò ab infallibilitate Ecclesiæ: quia de fide est, quòd Ecclesia sit columna, & firmamentum veritatis, 1. Timoth. 3. contra quam nec porta inferi prævalebunt, Matth. 16. atqui si non esset de fide, quòd Summus Pontifex, legitimè electus, & pacificè ab Ecclesia acceptatus, sit verus Pontifex, & Vicarius Christi in terris, non esset de fide, quòd Ecclesia sit columna veritatis, contra quam portæ inferi non prævalerent: ergo. P. mi. quia posset primò errare in acceptanda fidei regula animata: nam omne, quod non est evidens, neque de fide, necesse est subjacere periculo errandi; & per consequens posset secundò ejusmodi Pontifex, tametsi legitimè electus, & pacificè ab Ecclesia acceptatus, errare, utpote in veritate rei nullus, in definiendo res fidei: cujus tamen definitioni tenetur Ecclesia credere; & per consequens ulterius posset tertìò Ecclesia errare, credendo ejusmodi Pontificis definitioni: ergo.

60. Confirm. secundò ab absurdis sequelis: quia primò neque esset de fide hanc n. Ecclesiam esse veram Ecclesiam, itèm hoc n. Concilium e. g. Tridentinum, esse verum Concilium; Secundò: omnia essent frustranea, quæ de Judice controversiarum fide divina creduntur in Ecclesia; Tertiò: non esset etiam de fide Benedictum XIII. regnantis hodie Clementis XII. Antecessorem, fuisse verum Pontificem, & sic de tota serie retrograda Pontificum, & consequenter neque fuisse, neque esse veros Episcopos, & veros Sacerdotes; atqui hæ sequelæ sunt omnino absurdæ: ergo & origo earum, quòd nempe non sit de fide regnantem p. t. Pontificem esse verum Pontificem, absurda est, & minimè toleranda. P. autem dd. sequelæ: quia primò sicut vera Ecclesia & verum Concilium in communi, dependet à verò Capite in communi, sic hæc n. vera Ecclesia, hoc n. verum Concilium dependet à verò Pontifice in individuo, tanquam à vero hoc n. Capite, ità, ut non possit credi vera Ecclesia verum Concilium, nisi credatur verus Pontifex, eò, quòd veritas illorum dependeat à material object of Theological Faith, and of faith, according to note 1; but such a truth is this: that the Supreme Pontiff reigning for the time being, legitimately elected and peacefully accepted, etc., is a true Pontiff, the successor of blessed Peter, and the Supreme Vicar of Christ on earth, according to note 2; therefore.

English

59. Confirmation 1, from the infallibility of the Church: because it is of faith that the Church is the pillar and ground of truth, 1 Tim. 3, against which the gates of hell shall not prevail, Matth. 16. But if it were not of faith that the Supreme Pontiff, legitimately elected and peacefully accepted by the Church, is a true Pontiff and the Vicar of Christ on earth, it would not be of faith that the Church is the pillar of truth against which the gates of hell would not prevail; therefore. I prove the minor: because, first, she could err in accepting the animate rule of faith; for everything that is neither evident nor of faith must lie open to the danger of error. And, consequently, secondly, such a Pontiff, though legitimately elected and peacefully accepted by the Church, could err in defining matters of faith, being in the truth of the matter no Pontiff at all; and yet the Church is bound to believe his definition. And, consequently, further, thirdly, the Church could err by believing the definition of such a Pontiff; therefore.

60. Confirmation 2, from absurd consequences: because, first, it would not be of faith that this individual Church is the true Church, nor likewise that this individual Council, for example Trent, is a true Council. Secondly: all those things would be vain which are believed in the Church by divine faith concerning the Judge of controversies. Thirdly: neither would it be of faith that Benedict XIII, the predecessor of Clement XII who reigns today, was a true Pontiff, and so on through the whole retrograde series of Pontiffs; and consequently neither that there have been or are true bishops and true priests. But these consequences are altogether absurd; therefore their origin also — namely, that it is not of faith that the Pontiff reigning for the time being is a true Pontiff — is absurd and by no means to be tolerated. But the said consequences are proved: because, first, as the true Church and the true Council in general depend on a true Head in general, so this individual true Church and this individual true Council depend on a true Pontiff in the individual, as on this individual true Head, so that neither a true Church nor a true Council can be believed unless a true Pontiff is believed, for the reason that their truth depends on his truth, as things founded depend on veritate istius, tanquam fundatorum à fundamento, seu (juxta phrasim veritatis) à Petra; Secundò: quia posset quilibet dicere: credo quidem dari in Ecclesia aliquem controversiarum Judicem, sed non credo hunc esse Clementem XII. & consequenter nec recurremus ad illum pro judicio, neque hòc per ipsum acceptò staremus; Tertiò: quia eadem est ratio de uno, quæ de altero: & ruente Pontifice, ruunt Episcopi, & ruentibus his, corruunt Presbyteri: ergo. Quòd verò dd. sequelæ sint omnino absurdæ P. etiam facilè: quia primò confitemur in Symbolo: credo - S. Ecclesiam Catholicam; 2dò: quia de fide debeo credere dogmata à Concilio definita; jam autem sicut de fide debet esse certum, hoc esse verum Evangelium, ut credam de fide, quæ docet Evangelium: sic de fide debet esse certum, hoc esse verum Concilium, ut credam de fide, quæ docet Concilium; 3tiò: quia si frustranea essent ea, quæ fide divina creduntur de Judice controversiarum in Ecclesia, ipsa fides divina esset, quòd absit, falsa; 4tò: quia ruente Pontificum[3], ut posset ruere, si non esset de fide, & consequenter ruente clero, tota corrueret hierarchia Ecclesiastica, & sicut à Synagoga, sic etiam ab Ecclesia ablatum esset Sacerdotium, &c: ergo.

Latin

61. Dixi verò, tam in ipso q. propositæ statu, quàm in ipsa resolutione ejusdem, primò: legitimè electus, & pacificè ab Ecclesia acceptatus, &c: quia sinè legitima electione, & pacifica acceptance, ac cum justa contradictione, Apostolicam occupantes Sedem, potius invasores, quàm possessores sunt ejusdem, & nulli Pontifices. Quanquam (ùt præinsinuavi supra n. 57.) electio quidem non habeat se nisi permodum dispositivæ conditionis ad designandam personam Pontificiam: quæ dispositio, utpote non totalis Ecclesiæ, aut Capitis, saltèm quæ talis, seu quæ loquentis ex cathedra, sed partialis Ecclesiæ, non habentis infallibilem Spiritûs S. assistentiam, potest falli; acceptatio autem habet se permodum formalis designationis ejusmodi personæ Pontificiæ, cui Caput principale, Christus, ipsam conferat dignitatem Pontificiam[4], Capitis Vicariæ: quæ designatio, utpote totalis Ecclesiæ, ac proinde, tanquam columnæ veritatis, habentis infallibilem Spiritûs S. assistentiam, non potest falli; sed est quædam revelatio virtualis, ad universalem propositionem illam, formaliter explicitè revelatam: omnino their foundation, or (to use the phrase of Truth himself) on the Rock. Secondly: because anyone could say: I believe indeed that there is in the Church some Judge of controversies, but I do not believe that this Judge is Clement XII; and consequently we shall neither have recourse to him for judgment, nor, when judgment has been received through him, shall we stand by it. Thirdly: because the reasoning is the same for one as for the other; and if the Pontiff falls, the bishops fall, and if these fall, the priests collapse; therefore. But that the said consequences are altogether absurd is likewise easily proved: because, first, we confess in the Creed: I believe in the holy Catholic Church. Secondly: because by faith I must believe the dogmas defined by a Council; and now, just as it must be certain by faith that this is a true Gospel, in order that I may believe by faith what the Gospel teaches, so it must be certain by faith that this is a true Council, in order that I may believe by faith what the Council teaches. Thirdly: because if those things were vain which are believed by divine faith concerning the Judge of controversies in the Church, divine faith itself would be — which God forbid — false. Fourthly: because if the Pontiff[3] fell, as he could fall if this were not of faith, and consequently if the clergy fell, the whole ecclesiastical hierarchy would collapse, and as from the Synagogue, so also from the Church, the priesthood would have been taken away, etc.; therefore.

English

61. But I said, both in the very statement of the question proposed and in the resolution of it, first: legitimately elected and peacefully accepted by the Church, etc., because without a legitimate election and a peaceful acceptance, and with just contradiction, those who occupy the Apostolic See are invaders of it rather than possessors, and are no Pontiffs at all. And this although (as I intimated above at § 57) the election stands only by way of a dispositive condition for designating the person of the Pontiff — which disposition, being not that of the whole Church, nor that of the Head, at least as such, that is, as speaking from the chair, but that of a partial Church, which does not have the infallible assistance of the Holy Spirit, can be deceived. But the acceptance stands by way of a formal designation of that person of the Pontiff on whom the principal Head, Christ, confers the Pontifical[4] dignity itself, the dignity of the Vicarial Head; and this designation, being that of the whole Church, and therefore of her who, as the pillar of truth, has the infallible assistance of the Holy Spirit, cannot be deceived. Rather it is a kind of virtual revelation, applying to that universal proposition, formally explicitly revealed, every Pontiff legitimately elected and peacefully accepted is a true Pontiff, etc., by the deed itself as it were

Latin

Pontifex legitime electus, & pacifice acceptatus, est verus Pontifex, &c. applicans, ipsò factò quasi subsumendo: atqui hic n. Pontifex est legitime electus, & pacifice acceptatus, ex eademque infallibiliter explicans, particularem, seu singularem propositionem istam, formaliter implicitè in eadem revelatam, ipsò etiam factò quasi concludendo: ergo hic n. Pontifex est verus Pontifex, &c. imò est quædam revelatio formalis, juxta illud: vox Populi, vox DEI. Præterea dixi secundò: neque eidem, Pontificatui nimirum suo, authentice renuntians: quia facta renuntiatione authentica, reassumit qualitatem particularis membri, deposita dignitate universalis Capitis totius Ecclesiæ. Ut verò Papa censeatur authentice Papatui renunciare, non sufficit interna, aut privata, sed requiritur renuntiatio externa, & publica: nam legitimus possessor non censetur se ulla re possessa abdicare, & præsertim tali re, qualis est Pontificatus, nisi facta abdicatio certa sit moraliter. Attamen contra positam conclusionem

62. Objic. I. Martinus V. conditionatam solummodo exigit fidem de hoc n. Pontifice, ab hæreticis, reconciliari Ecclesiæ volentibus, præstandam, si nimirum est legitime electus: ergo cùm non sit certum hunc n. hominem esse in Pontificem legitime electum, non exigit absolutam de eo fidem, sed tantummodo conditionatam. Resp. N. A. non enim exigit, ut conditionatè credant, sed absolutè, unam, Sanctam, Catholicam, & Apostolicam Ecclesiam: ergo (supposita electione confirmata per acceptationem) non exigit, etiam, ut conditionatè solummodo credant Caput hujus Ecclesiæ; sinè quo esset acephala, & stante non certo, supposita etiam acceptatione ejusdem, fallibilitati subjacens: contra appromissam sibi assistentiam infallibilem Spiritûs S.

63. Objic. II. Licèt Proverb. 8. DEUS dicat: per me Reges regnant, &c. & consequenter Reges habere potestatem ab ipsomet DEO; non est tamen formaliter implicitè revelatum, hunc in individuo Regem, esse legitimum Regem, & habere potestatem ab ipsomet DEO: ergo à pari. Confirm. primò: licèt sit de fide, omnem Episcopum, ritè consecratum, esse verum Episcopum; non est tamen de fide hunc n. Episcopum esse ritè consecratum, & verum Episcopum: ergo iterum à pari. Confirm. secundò: licèt sit de fide, omnem ritè baptizatum hominem consecutum esse subsuming: but this individual Pontiff is legitimately elected and peacefully accepted; and, from that same proposition, infallibly explicating this particular, or singular, proposition, formally implicitly revealed in it, by the deed itself as it were concluding: therefore this individual Pontiff is a true Pontiff, etc. Indeed it is a kind of formal revelation, according to that saying: vox Populi, vox DEI (the voice of the people is the voice of God). Furthermore I said, secondly: and not authentically renouncing it, that is, his Pontificate; because, once an authentic renunciation has been made, he resumes the quality of a particular member, having laid down the dignity of universal Head of the whole Church. But in order that a Pope be reckoned to renounce the Papacy authentically, an internal or private renunciation does not suffice; an external and public renunciation is required. For a legitimate possessor is not reckoned to abdicate anything he possesses, and especially a thing such as the Pontificate, unless the abdication made is morally certain. Nevertheless, against the conclusion laid down:

English

62. Objection I. Martin V requires from heretics wishing to be reconciled to the Church only a conditional faith concerning this individual Pontiff, namely if he has been legitimately elected. Therefore, since it is not certain that this individual man has been legitimately elected as Pontiff, he does not require an absolute faith concerning him, but only a conditional one. Reply: I deny the antecedent. For he does not require that they believe conditionally, but absolutely, in one, holy, Catholic, and Apostolic Church. Therefore (the election being supposed confirmed by the acceptance) neither does he require that they believe only conditionally in the Head of this Church, without whom she would be headless, and, that Head remaining uncertain even on the supposition of her acceptance of him, she would lie open to fallibility — against the infallible assistance of the Holy Spirit promised to her.

63. Objection II. Although in Prov. 8 God says: by me kings reign, etc., and consequently that kings have their power from God himself, nevertheless it is not formally implicitly revealed that this king in the individual is a legitimate king and has his power from God himself; therefore the same holds here by parity. Confirmation 1: although it is of faith that every bishop duly consecrated is a true bishop, nevertheless it is not of faith that this individual bishop is duly consecrated and a true bishop; therefore again by parity. Confirmation 2: although it is of faith that every duly baptized man has obtained sanctifying grace, nevertheless it is not of faith that this gratiam sanctificantem; non est tamen de fide hunc n. hominem esse ritè baptizatum hominem, & consecutum esse gratiam sanctificantem: ergo rursum à pari.

Latin

Resp. ad argumentum C. A. N. C. Disparit. est: quia regno quidem in assumendo Rege, dissimulata potestate ad eundem à Regno assumendum, non est appromissa infallibilis Spiritûs S. assistentia; Ecclesiæ autem est appromissa, ceu columna, & firramento veritatis; cujusmodi columna desineret esse, si laberetur in errorem circa acceptionem veri Capitis sui. Sed neque erat ratio sic appromittendi regno infallibilem Spiritûs S. assistentiam in assumendo Rege, sicut Ecclesiæ in assumendo Pontifice: cùm Rex quidem, ad naturalem dirigens felicitatem, & temporalem, non sit infallibilis in ordinandis regni sui rebus; Pontifex autem sit infallibilis in materia fidei, & morum: quæ infallibilitas Pontificis in definiendo res fidei, à veritate, & infallibilitate Pontificatûs, & veritas Pontificatûs, ab infallibilitate acceptionis hujus n. Pontificis, factæ ab Ecclesia, dependet; nullius enim Pontificis, nulla definitio. Cæterùm sicut omnis, sic aliqua potestas laica est quidem à DEO, sed vel approbante, vel permittente; potestas autem Ecclesiastica, nempe Pontificia, est à DEO approbante.

Ad Confir. 1. Resp. C. iterum A. & N. rursum C. Disparit. est primò: quia acceptatio Episcopi à suis Diœcesanis non habet vim revelationis, sicut habet acceptatio Pontificis ab Ecclesia: cùm illa quidem sit partialis; ista autem Ecclesiæ totalis. Secundò: quia potest electus Episcopus esse Simoniacus, cujus electio erit nulla, & quidem ità, ut defectum ejus non suppleat subsecuta confirmatio Pontificia, ut habetur in ¶. cum detestabile. §. per electiones. & §. statuentes. De Simonia, è contrà verò licèt electus sit etiam Pontifex Simoniacus, cujus prima quidem electio, facta à p. Ecclesiæ, pariter erit nulla; sed tamen ità, ut defectum ejus suppleat subsecuta electio secunda, seu acceptatio, facta à tota Ecclesia: cui DEUS, ceu columnæ veritatis, infallibilem appromisit assistentiam Spiritûs S. qui sicut potest præsentatæ sibi personæ etiam indignæ summam conferre dignitatem Pontificiam, sic, vi appromissæ ejusdem assistentiæ infallibilis, omnem sufferentis incertitudinem Capitis, electæ, & dilectæ sponsæ suæ, debet eam, nempe dignitatem Pontificiam, conferre tali personæ, individual man is a duly baptized man and has obtained sanctifying grace; therefore once more by parity.

English

Reply to the argument: I concede the antecedent, I deny the consequence. The disparity is this: because to a kingdom, in taking up a king, the infallible assistance of the Holy Spirit has not been promised, the kingdom's power of taking him up being here left unquestioned; whereas to the Church it has been promised, as to the pillar and ground of truth — and she would cease to be such a pillar if she slipped into error concerning the acceptance of her true Head. Nor was there any reason for promising to a kingdom the infallible assistance of the Holy Spirit in taking up a king, as it was promised to the Church in taking up a Pontiff; since a king, directing men to natural and temporal happiness, is not infallible in ordering the affairs of his kingdom, whereas the Pontiff is infallible in matters of faith and morals. And this infallibility of the Pontiff in defining matters of faith depends on the truth and infallibility of the Pontificate, and the truth of the Pontificate depends on the infallibility of the acceptance of this individual Pontiff, made by the Church; for where there is no Pontiff, there is no definition. For the rest, as all lay power, so any lay power, is indeed from God, but from God either approving or permitting; whereas ecclesiastical power, namely the Pontifical, is from God approving.

To Confirmation 1. Reply: I again concede the antecedent, and again deny the consequence. The disparity is, first: because the acceptance of a bishop by his diocesans does not have the force of a revelation, as the acceptance of the Pontiff by the Church does; since the former is that of a partial Church, whereas the latter is that of the whole Church. Secondly: because a bishop who is elected can be a simoniac, and his election will be null, and null in such a way that the Pontifical confirmation that follows does not supply its defect, as is held in ¶. cum detestabile. §. per electiones. & §. statuentes. De Simonia. But on the contrary, even if a Pontiff who is elected be a simoniac, whose first election, made by a part of the Church, will likewise be null, it will yet be null in such a way that its defect is supplied by the second election, that is, the acceptance, which follows, made by the whole Church. To her God has promised the infallible assistance of the Holy Spirit, as to the pillar of truth; and as the Holy Spirit can confer the supreme Pontifical dignity on a person presented to him even if unworthy, so, by force of that same promised infallible assistance, which takes away every uncertainty about the Head of his chosen and beloved spouse, he must confer that sibi præsentatæ, tametsi indignæ, ùt valendo, sic volendo per d. assistantiam Spiritûs S. capacitare hoc casu incapacitatem. Tertiò: quia nullitas Episcopi non infert hæc absurda in totam Ecclesiam, quæ invehit in ipsam nullitas Pontificis, ubi puta, falsam Ecclesiam, falsa Concilia, frustraneam fidem de Iudice controversiarum fidei, &c.

Latin

Ad Confirm. 2. Resp. D. A. non est de fide respectu ipsiusmet baptizantis, N. A. respectu aliorum, C. A. vel T. & N. C. Stante hac veritate revelata formaliter explicitè: omnis ritè baptizatus consequitur gratiam sanctificantem, potest ritè baptizans cum physica evidentiâ, aut saltèm magna morali, subsumere: atqui hic homo est à me ritè baptizatus, & desuper hanc veritatem revelatam formaliter implicitè, atque adeò, tanquam objectum fidei, infallibiliter concludere: ergo hic homo consecutus est gratiam sanctificantem. Atque ità paritas est pro nobis; licèt cum disparitate, nostram confirmante sententiam, minoris; utpote naturalis, pro m. illa: atqui hic homo est à me ritè baptizatus, & majoris infallibilitatis, utpote supernaturalis, pro m. ista: atqui hic homo est legitimè in Pontificem electus, & pacificè ab Ecclesia acceptatus, stantis. Cæterùm loquendo de aliis, ruit paritas: quia non sicut baptizans ex illa formaliter explicitè revelata: omnis ritè baptizatus consequitur gratiam sanctificantem, potest subsumere infallibiliter: atqui hic homo est à me ritè baptizatus, atque ità ad illam formaliter explicitè revelatam applicare, ex eâdemque explicare istam, formaliter implicitè revelatam: ergo hic homo consecutus est gratiam sanctificantem; aut sicut potest fidelis ex illa formaliter explicitè revelata: omnis Pontifex legitimè electus, & pacificè ab Ecclesia acceptatus, est verus Pontifex, potest subsumere infallibiliter: atqui hic homo est legitimè in Pontificem electus, & pacificè ab Ecclesia acceptatus, atque ità ad illam formaliter explicitè revelatam applicare, ex eâdemque explicare istam, formaliter implicitè revelatam: ergo hic homo est verus Pontifex; non, inquam, sic non baptizantes possunt infallibiliter subsumere: atqui hic homo est ritè baptizatus, eò, quòd non sicut baptizans, sic non baptizantes, infallibiliter cognoscant factam intentionem debitam, licèt cognoscant fortè cætera infallibiliter; nisi fortasse etiam ipsa, nempe intentio baptizantis, innotesceret dignity, namely the Pontifical dignity, on such a person presented to him, even if unworthy — being able, as also willing, through the said assistance of the Holy Spirit, to make capacity out of incapacity in this case. Thirdly: because the nullity of a bishop does not bring upon the whole Church those absurdities which the nullity of a Pontiff brings upon her, namely a false Church, false Councils, a vain faith concerning the Judge of controversies of faith, etc.

English

To Confirmation 2. Reply: I distinguish the antecedent. It is not of faith with respect to the one who baptizes: I deny the antecedent; with respect to others: I concede the antecedent, or let it pass; and I deny the consequence. Given this truth formally explicitly revealed, every duly baptized person obtains sanctifying grace, the one who duly baptizes can, with physical evidence, or at least with great moral evidence, subsume: but this man has been duly baptized by me; and thereupon he can infallibly conclude this truth, formally implicitly revealed and therefore an object of faith: therefore this man has obtained sanctifying grace. And so the parity is on our side, though with a disparity that confirms our opinion: the disparity of a lesser infallibility, as being natural, standing for that minor, but this man has been duly baptized by me, and of a greater infallibility, as being supernatural, standing for this minor, but this man has been legitimately elected as Pontiff and peacefully accepted by the Church. For the rest, speaking of others, the parity collapses. For the one who baptizes can, from that formally explicitly revealed proposition, every duly baptized person obtains sanctifying grace, infallibly subsume: but this man has been duly baptized by me, and so apply this to that formally explicitly revealed proposition, and from it explicate this other, formally implicitly revealed: therefore this man has obtained sanctifying grace. Or again, a member of the faithful can, from that formally explicitly revealed proposition, every Pontiff legitimately elected and peacefully accepted by the Church is a true Pontiff, infallibly subsume: but this man has been legitimately elected as Pontiff and peacefully accepted by the Church, and so apply this to that formally explicitly revealed proposition, and from it explicate this other, formally implicitly revealed: therefore this man is a true Pontiff. Those who do not baptize, I say, cannot in this way infallibly subsume: but this man has been duly baptized; for the reason that those who do not baptize do not, as the one who baptizes does, know infallibly that the requisite intention was made, although they may perhaps know the rest infallibly — unless perhaps that very thing, namely the intention of the one baptizing, should become known to those who do not per revelationem etiam non baptizantibus, seu per formaliter, seu per revelationem æquivalenter talem: quô iterum casu (cujus intuitu dixi T.) absolveremur ab obligatione dandi disparitatem, inter eundem, & casum nostrum. Idem est respondendum ad alias paritates, huic, de baptismo, non disparet, seu respectu conficientium quodpiam Sacramentum, seu respectu illud suscipientium, seu respectu aliorum, cum certitudine, vel incertitudine ex ipso, nempe Sacramento, aliôve revelato formaliter explicitè, deducendum quidpiam aliud, revelatum formaliter implicitè.

Latin

64. Objic. III. Stante revelatione illius propositionis universalis: omnis Pontifex legitimè electus, &c. non est nobis revelatum, quòd hic n. Pontifex sit vir, ritè baptizatus, ritè ordinatus, &c. ergo neque revelatum est nobis, quòd sit verus Pontifex. Confirm. primò: Joannes VIII. fuit à tota Ecclesia acceptatus, & tamen fuit Papissa potiùs, quàm Papa, teste Martino Polono: ergo. Confirm. secundò: Formosus fuit pariter à tota acceptatus Ecclesia, & tamen pariter non fuit ullus Pontifex verus, sed Psevdo-Papa, ùt declaravit Stephanus VII. ergo.

Resp. ad argumentum D. A. ante acceptationem, C. post acceptationem, N. A. & C. Antequam quidem electio confirmetur per acceptationem, humanum est opus, à paucorum dependens testimonio, & multis subjectum dubiis, qualia sunt in objectione memorata; postquam autem electio confirmatur per acceptationem, jam electus Pontifex divinum est opus, & non ampliùs humanum, eòque ipsò confirmatum à Christo, ità, ut acceptatio, divinæ æquivalens revelationi, electum Pontificem infallibiliter manifestet nobis, esse verum Pontificem, nullis subjectum dubiis, & consequenter esse virum, ritè baptizatum, ritè ordinatum, &c. quia hæc omnia continentur formaliter implicitè in quidditate veri Pontificis.

Ad Confirm. 1. Resp. C. 1. p. A. n. 2. fœmineus enim ille Martini Poloni Papa est egregium figmentum, ex Utopia, ùt ajunt, advectum, & creditur originem ducere ab aliquo hæretico, ex quo Martinus suam hausit fabulam. Occasio autem mendacissimi hujus commenti erat meticulosus, atque adeò effæminatus Joannis animus, in tuendis Ecclesiæ juribus, quem exhibuit potissimùm, baptize as well, through a revelation, whether formally such or a revelation equivalently such. And in that case again (with a view to which I said let it pass) we should be released from the obligation of giving a disparity between that case and our own. The same answer is to be given to the other parities that are not disparate from this one about baptism, whether with respect to those who confect some sacrament, or with respect to those who receive it, or with respect to others, who, with certainty or uncertainty, deduce from that sacrament itself, or from something else formally explicitly revealed, something else that is formally implicitly revealed.

English

64. Objection III. Given the revelation of that universal proposition, every Pontiff legitimately elected, etc., it is not revealed to us that this individual Pontiff is a man, duly baptized, duly ordained, etc.; therefore neither is it revealed to us that he is a true Pontiff. Confirmation 1: John VIII was accepted by the whole Church, and yet was a Popess rather than a Pope, as Martin of Poland testifies; therefore. Confirmation 2: Formosus was likewise accepted by the whole Church, and yet likewise was no true Pontiff, but a Pseudo-Pope, as Stephen VII declared; therefore.

Reply to the argument: I distinguish the antecedent. Before the acceptance: I concede it; after the acceptance: I deny the antecedent and the consequence. Before the election is confirmed by the acceptance, it is a human work, depending on the testimony of a few and subject to many doubts, such as those mentioned in the objection. But after the election is confirmed by the acceptance, the elected Pontiff is now a divine work and no longer a human one, and by that very fact confirmed by Christ, so that the acceptance, being equivalent to a divine revelation, infallibly manifests to us that the elected Pontiff is a true Pontiff, subject to no doubts, and consequently that he is a man, duly baptized, duly ordained, etc.; for all these are contained formally implicitly in the quiddity of a true Pontiff.

To Confirmation 1. Reply: I concede the first part of the antecedent, I deny the second. For that female Pope of Martin of Poland is a notable fiction, imported, as they say, from Utopia, and is believed to take its origin from some heretic, from whom Martin drew his fable. But the occasion of this most lying invention was the timid, and so effeminate, spirit of John in defending the rights of the Church, which he displayed above all when he quando Ludovici pii natu minorem coronavit præ natu majore, itèm quando cantans familiare hodiedum non paucis, placebo domino, sed minimè Altissimo, ad instantiam Basili, Orientis Imperatoris, in Sedem D. Ignatii de mortui[5], admisit Photium Schismaticum, à Concilio Constantinopolitano III. condemnatum, & excommunicatum: ob quam meticulositatem suam, animique volubilitatem, per scomma dictus est fœmina, quemadmodum defacto meticulosos, ob parem cum fœminis animi volubilitatem, consuevimus fœminas intitulare.

Latin

Ad Confirmat. 2. Resp. Resp. C. rursum 1. p. A. & N. rursum 2. Formosus enim, rectè à forma nuncupatus, congruente nomini omine, non solùm erat Papa verus, sed insuper etiam (ùt testis est Bellarminus) doctrinâ, & sanctitate insignis, atque adeò forma factus gregis. Quòd verò Stephanus VII. eum habuerit pro Pseudo-Papa, mirè, ac dirè in innocuas illius exuvias desæviens, omniâque acta ipsius invalidans, non erat juris, sed facti, non ex cathedra Petri, sed ex cathedra pestilentia, à præoccupante mentem passione, non examinatâ sufficienter causâ, actitatum, neque à successoribus ejusdem Stephani VII. Romano I. & Theodoro II. approbatum, quin imò à Joanne IX. manifestè improbatum, & reprobatum.

65. Objic. IV. Licèt Ecclesia sit columna, & firmamentum veritatis, non ideò tamen in electione, & acceptatione Pontificis habet sibi promissam infallibilem Spiritûs S. assistentiam: ergo. A. P. omnem infallibilitatem, quâ gaudet Ecclesia, accipit dependenter à suo Capite: ergo. Confirm. primò: Ecclesia incompleta non habet infallibilem assistentiam Spiritûs S. in ordine ad decidendas fidei controversias; Sed præsens quæstio: an Summus Pontifex p. t. regnans, puta Clemens XII. sit verus Pontifex, est una ex fidei controversiis: ergo. Subsumo: atqui si esset de fide, regnantem, p. t. Pontificem, esse verum Pontificem, Ecclesia incompleta haberet infallibilem Spiritûs S. assistentiam in ordine ad decidendas fidei controversias: quia acceptatio esset infallibilis controversiæ hujus decisio: ergo. Confirm. secundò: Ecclesia saltèm ad breve tempus erravit aliquando in agnoscendo Papa vero, ut videtur contigisse in eo schismate famoso, ubi 3. residebant Pontifices in Sede Petri: ergo potest etiam errare ad tempus longius. Confir. tertio: Ecclesia erravit, putando legitima crowned the younger son of Louis the Pious in preference to the elder; and likewise when, singing that placebo domino which is familiar to not a few even today, but by no means pleasing to the Most High, at the instance of Basil the Emperor of the East he admitted the schismatic Photius, condemned and excommunicated by the Third Council of Constantinople, to the see of the deceased[5] blessed Ignatius. On account of this timidity of his, and this fickleness of mind, he was in mockery called a woman, just as in fact we are accustomed to entitle timid men women, on account of a fickleness of mind equal to that of women.

English

To Confirmation 2. Reply. Reply: I again concede the first part of the antecedent, and again deny the second. For Formosus, rightly named from forma, the omen matching the name, was not only a true Pope, but moreover (as Bellarmine is witness) distinguished in doctrine and holiness, and so made a pattern (forma) to the flock. But that Stephen VII held him for a Pseudo-Pope, raging strangely and dreadfully against his harmless remains and invalidating all his acts, was not a matter of law but of fact; it was transacted not from the chair of Peter but from the chair of pestilence, out of a passion that had seized his mind, the cause not having been sufficiently examined; nor was it approved by the successors of the same Stephen VII, Romanus I and Theodore II; on the contrary, it was manifestly disapproved and reprobated by John IX.

65. Objection IV. Although the Church is the pillar and ground of truth, she does not on that account have promised to her the infallible assistance of the Holy Spirit in the election and acceptance of the Pontiff; therefore. Proof of the antecedent: every infallibility that the Church enjoys she receives dependently on her Head; therefore. Confirmation 1: the incomplete Church does not have the infallible assistance of the Holy Spirit with a view to deciding controversies of faith; but the present question, whether the Supreme Pontiff reigning for the time being, say Clement XII, is a true Pontiff, is one of the controversies of faith; therefore. I subsume: but if it were of faith that the Pontiff reigning for the time being is a true Pontiff, the incomplete Church would have the infallible assistance of the Holy Spirit with a view to deciding controversies of faith, because the acceptance would be an infallible decision of this controversy; therefore. Confirmation 2: the Church has at some time erred, at least for a short time, in recognizing the true Pope, as seems to have happened in that famous schism in which three Pontiffs sat on the see of Peter; therefore she can also err for a longer time. Confirmation 3: the Church erred in thinking the marriages of eunuchs evnuchorum matrimonia, donec Sixtus V. ea declarâsset illegitima: ergo potest etiam errare in acceptando pro legitimo Pontificem illegitimum.

Latin

Resp. ad argumentum N. A. Ad P. D. A. omnem infallibilitatem, quâ per assistentiam Spiritûs S. gaudet Ecclesia, in ordine ad acceptandum Caput suum, accipit dependenter ab ipso Capite suo N. A. quâ gaudet in ordine ad decidendas fidei controversias, subdist: radicaliter, N. A. formaliter, adhuc subd: antequam illud legitimè habeat, N. postquam illud legitimè habet, C. A. & N. C. In ordine quidem ad acceptandum Caput suum habet Ecclesia, ceu columna, & firmamentum veritatis, appromissam sibi infallibilem Spiritûs S. assistentiam independentem ab ipso Capite suo: nè alioqui contra rationem columnæ, & fundamenti veritatis, erret in acceptando eodem Capite suo, & consequenter etiam in decidendis per ipsum controversiis fidei, tanquam per putatitium Judicem controversiarum, & re ipsa nullum; in ordine autem ad decidendas fidei controversias, ab hac, de acceptato Pontifice vero, per ipsam acceptationem, licèt non signatè, tamen exercitè decisa, contradistinctas, non habet omnino appromissam sibi infallibilem Spiritûs S. assistentiam independentem ab ipso Capite suo, nisi radicaliter: quatenus habet potestatem assumendi tale Caput, vi cujus exigit infallibilitatem in decidendis fidei controversiis, ità, ut, quam radicat in sensu diviso ipsius Capitis sui, seu antequam illud habet, eandem habeat formaliter, infallibilitatem nempe in decidendis fidei controversiis, in sensu composito ipsius Capitis sui, seu postquam illud habet.

Inde ad confirm. 1. Resp. D. M. Ecclesia incompleta non habet infallibilem assistentiam Spiritûs S. in ordine ad decidendas fidei controversias, ab hac, de acceptato Pontifice vero, distinctas, C. M. vel T. quia posset subdistingui per ly radicaliter, & ly formaliter, ab hac, de acceptato Pontifice vero, indistinctas, subd: ad decidendas signatè, C. ad decidendas exercitè, N. M. D. proportionaliter m. unà cum C. & N. C. licèt alias fidei controversias, ab hoc, de acceptato Pontifice vero, distinctas, non possit Ecclesia incompleta decidere, nisi radicaliter; nihilominus hanc ipsam controversiam, de acceptato Pontifice vero, & ab hac legitimate, until Sixtus V had declared them illegitimate; therefore she can also err in accepting an illegitimate Pontiff as legitimate.

English

Reply to the argument: I deny the antecedent. To the proof: I distinguish the antecedent. Every infallibility which the Church enjoys through the assistance of the Holy Spirit with a view to accepting her Head she receives dependently on her Head himself: I deny the antecedent. The infallibility she enjoys with a view to deciding controversies of faith: I subdistinguish — radically: I deny the antecedent; formally: I subdistinguish still further — before she legitimately has him: I deny it; after she legitimately has him: I concede the antecedent; and I deny the consequence. For with a view to accepting her Head the Church, as the pillar and ground of truth, has promised to her the infallible assistance of the Holy Spirit independently of her Head himself, lest otherwise, against her character as the pillar and foundation of truth, she should err in accepting that Head of hers, and consequently also in the controversies of faith decided through him, as through a putative Judge of controversies who in reality is none. But with a view to deciding those controversies of faith which are contradistinguished from this one about the true Pontiff having been accepted — a controversy decided by the acceptance itself, though not signately [signate], yet in exercise [exercite] — she does not at all have promised to her the infallible assistance of the Holy Spirit independently of her Head himself, except radically: that is, insofar as she has the power of taking up such a Head, by force of which she requires infallibility in deciding controversies of faith; so that the infallibility which she roots in the divided sense of her Head, that is, before she has him, that same infallibility, namely in deciding controversies of faith, she has formally in the composite sense of her Head, that is, after she has him.

Hence to Confirmation 1. Reply: I distinguish the major. The incomplete Church does not have the infallible assistance of the Holy Spirit with a view to deciding those controversies of faith which are distinct from this one about the true Pontiff having been accepted: I concede the major, or let it pass, because it could be subdistinguished by the terms radically and formally. With a view to deciding those which are not distinct from this one about the true Pontiff having been accepted: I subdistinguish — with a view to deciding them signately: I concede; with a view to deciding them in exercise: I deny the major. I distinguish the minor proportionally, together with the concession, and I deny the consequence. For although the ipsa indistinctas, uti quòd ejusmodi Pontifex sit vir, & non fœmina, ritè baptizatus, ritè ordinatus, &c: per ipsam decedit acceptionem, utpote voci divinæ æquivalentem, licèt non signatè, tamen exercitè, relinquens id decidendum signatè Ecclesiæ, per assumptum Caput suum jam complete: quemadmodum videtur etiam id ipsum jam esse decisum ab œcumenicis Conciliis, n. 58. in P. conclusionis 1. relatis.

Latin

Ad Confirm. 2. Resp. T. A. N. C. Disparit. est: quia datô, non concessô, quòd Ecclesia erraret ad breve tempus in agnoscendo Papa vero, illud tamen non exponeret ipsam periculo falsorum dogmatum, ac quasi irreparabilis damni: quia acta hujusmodi Pontificis dubii, neque valorem habent, defectu veri Pontificatûs, neque vires fortiuntur, nisi à Pontifice certo probentur, & stabiliantur; licèt quidem omnino etiam id non fieret absque non nullo Ecclesiæ detrimento. At verò si erraret Ecclesia ad tempus longius in acceptando pro Pontifice vero, putà per totum Pontificatûs cursum, Pontifice reipsa nullo, istud exponeret ipsam periculo falsorum dogmatum, ac quasi irreparabilis damni: quia posset eodem modo errare in secundo, & in tertio, &c. Cæterùm dixi: T. A. non enim verum, sed falsum est omnino, Ecclesiam ad breve etiam tempus errâsse aliquando in acceptando Pontifice vero: nullum siquidem apud ullum historicum, nisi falsarium, extat asserti hujus testimonium. Quòd verò acciderit interdum plures Sedem Petrinam occupâsse, circa id nota: quòd ejusmodi schisma possit triplici modo evenire, primò: ut uni, legitimè electo, & pacificè acceptato, accedat alter: & hoc casu prior præscripsit, manétque in possessione veri Papatûs, contra posteriorem Anti-papam Schismaticum. Secundò: ut maxima pars Ecclesiæ, & quasi tota, acceptet Pontificem, præter unum, alterúmve Regem, Schismatis Authorem, cujus gratiâ nonnulli Cardinales, à vero Papa recedentes, Psevdo-Papæ accedunt: & hoc casu licèt erret partialis, non errat tamen Ecclesia totalis, stante jure pro ipso Pontifice, à maxima parte Ecclesiæ, atque adeò quasi ad totali, acceptato, & reipsa vero, contra Psevdo-Papas. Tertiò: ut duobus, aut tribus sedentibus, ex duplici, aut triplici parte incomplete Church cannot decide the other controversies of faith, distinct from this one about the true Pontiff having been accepted, except radically, nevertheless she decides this very controversy about the true Pontiff having been accepted, and those not distinct from it — such as that this Pontiff is a man and not a woman, duly baptized, duly ordained, etc. — by the acceptance itself, as being equivalent to a divine utterance, though not signately, yet in exercise; leaving that to be decided signately by the Church, now made complete through the Head she has taken up. And this same thing seems also already to have been decided by the ecumenical Councils cited at § 58 in the first proof of the conclusion.

English

To Confirmation 2. Reply: let the antecedent pass, I deny the consequence. The disparity is this: because, granted but not conceded that the Church erred for a short time in recognizing the true Pope, that would nevertheless not expose her to the danger of false dogmas and of a well-nigh irreparable harm; for the acts of such a doubtful Pontiff neither have validity, for want of a true Pontificate, nor do they acquire force unless they are approved and established by a certain Pontiff — although indeed even this would not come about altogether without some detriment to the Church. But if the Church were to err for a longer time in accepting as a true Pontiff one who was in reality no Pontiff at all, say through the whole course of a Pontificate, that would expose her to the danger of false dogmas and of a well-nigh irreparable harm, because she could err in the same way about a second and a third, and so on. For the rest, I said: let the antecedent pass; for it is not true, but altogether false, that the Church ever erred, even for a short time, in accepting the true Pontiff, since in no historian, unless a forger, does there exist any testimony to this assertion. But as to the fact that it has sometimes happened that several occupied the see of Peter, note this concerning it: that such a schism can arise in three ways. First, that to one man legitimately elected and peacefully accepted a second is added; and in this case the first has prescribed and remains in possession of the true Papacy, against the later schismatic Antipope. Secondly, that the greatest part of the Church, and as it were the whole, accepts a Pontiff, apart from one or another king, the author of a schism, for whose sake some Cardinals, withdrawing from the true Pope, go over to a Pseudo-Pope; and in this case, although a partial Church errs, the whole Church nevertheless does not err, the right standing on the side of that Pontiff who was accepted by the greatest part of the Church, and so by what is as it were the whole, and who is in reality the true one, against the Pseudo-Popes. Thirdly, that when two or three are sitting, contradiction is æqualiter ferè contradicatur: & in hoc casu, ut nullus est Papatûs veri possessor pacificus, sic nullus est Papa verus, sed Anti-Papæ meri.

Latin

Ad Confirm. 3. Resp. N. A. non enim id putavit, aut positivè approbavit, multò minùs legaliter definivit Ecclesiæ; sed solùm permisit, & dissimulavit, atque ità, ob exigentiam circumstantiarum, negativè tantùm se habuit: in quo non latet quidquam erroris; in acceptationem autem positivè influit: ac proinde non posset non errare, pro vero, Pontificem falsum acceptando, cum longa recensitarum sequelarum absurdarum cauda.

66. Objic. V. Acceptatio Ecclesiæ non est virtualis revelatio, & infallibilis applicatio illius propositionis universalis: omnis Pontifex, legitimè electus, & pacificè acceptatus, &c: ad singularem istam: ergo hic non[6] Pontifex, est verus Pontifex: ergo. P. A. Cardinalium electio non est d. revelatio, ac d. applicatio: ergo neque acceptatio Ecclesiæ. P. C. primò: quia acceptatio Ecclesiæ fundatur in Cardinalium electione: ergo si non est electio Cardinalium, neque acceptatio Ecclesiæ erit d. revelatio, ac d. applicatio. P. C. secundò à pari: quia acceptatio legis fundatur in voluntate principis, non habet acceptatio subditorum majorem vim, quàm voluntas legislatoris: ergo à pari. Confir. 1mò: Si electio consumata, etiam electio continuata esset ejusmodi revelatio virtualis, & applicatio infallibilis; atqui non est: quia potest Ecclesia electum consumatè, prudentem, & fidelem, retinere, atque hoc acceptare modo continuatè, factum amentem, aut redditum infidelem, atque ità pro vero falsum: ergo. Confirm. secundò: si acceptatio esset virtualis revelatio, applicans infallibiliter illam propositionem universalem: omnis Pontifex legitimè electus, & pacificè acceptatus, &c. ad singularem istam: ergo hic n. Pontifex est verus Pontifex, id præstaret, vel ante, vel in, vel post instans terminativum acceptationis ipsissimæ; atqui non præstat id in ullo dd. instantium: quia in nullo fit nova revelatio: ergo.

Resp. ad argumentum N. A. Ad P. C. A. N. C. quia non sic electio Cardinalium, sicut Ecclesiæ acceptatio est ultimum, in quo made almost equally from the two or three parties; and in this case, as none is a peaceful possessor of the true Papacy, so none is a true Pope, but they are mere Antipopes.

English

To Confirmation 3. Reply: I deny the antecedent. For the Church did not think this, nor positively approve it, much less lawfully define it; she only permitted it and passed it over in silence, and so, because of the exigency of circumstances, conducted herself only negatively, in which there lies hidden nothing of error. But upon the acceptance she exerts a positive influence; and therefore she could not but err by accepting a false Pontiff for a true one, with the long tail of absurd consequences already recounted.

66. Objection V. The acceptance of the Church is not a virtual revelation and an infallible application of that universal proposition, every Pontiff legitimately elected and peacefully accepted, etc., to this singular one: therefore this individual[6] Pontiff is a true Pontiff; therefore. Proof of the antecedent: the election by the Cardinals is not the said revelation and the said application; therefore neither is the acceptance of the Church. Proof of the consequence, first: because the acceptance of the Church is founded on the election by the Cardinals; therefore if the election by the Cardinals is not the said revelation and the said application, neither will the acceptance of the Church be. Proof of the consequence, secondly, by parity: because the acceptance of a law is founded on the will of the prince, the acceptance by the subjects has no greater force than the will of the lawgiver; therefore the same holds by parity. Confirmation 1: if the completed election were such a virtual revelation and infallible application, the continued election would be so too; but it is not, because the Church can retain one elected in a completed manner, prudent and faithful, and go on accepting him in this way continuously after he has become insane or has turned unbeliever, and so accept a false Pontiff for a true one; therefore. Confirmation 2: if the acceptance were a virtual revelation, infallibly applying that universal proposition, every Pontiff legitimately elected and peacefully accepted, etc., to this singular one, therefore this individual Pontiff is a true Pontiff, it would do this either before, or in, or after the terminative instant of the acceptance itself; but it does not do this in any of the said instants, because in none of them is a new revelation made; therefore.

Reply to the argument: I deny the antecedent. To the proof: I concede the antecedent, I deny the consequence; because the election by the Cardinals is explicatur sensus, & voluntas Ecclesiæ, respectu legitimi Capitis sui, adeò, ut licèt electio prima Cardinalium non esset legitima, adhuc tamen electio secunda Ecclesiæ non esset illegitima, aut erronea: alioqui foret Ecclesia potiùs fovea falsitatis, quàm columna veritatis, ùt in regula, sic per consequentiam delusa etiam in regulato: cum certitudo regulæ non possit excedi à certitudine regulati, & ipsa Ecclesia non sit ulla regula, independenter à suo capite; nisi NB. in eodem acceptando: nè alioqui unà cum ipso esset cynosura errandi: de cætero non sinè ipso, sed cum ipso, habens quoad omnia reliqua vim regulandi.

Latin

Ad P. C. 1. Resp. D. A. acceptatio Ecclesiæ fundatur in Cardinalium electione, tanquam in prærequisita defacto per legem positivam conditione, C. tanquam in testimonio infallibili, aliàve basi suæ infallibilitatis, N. A. & C. Præcedit quidem electio, (quamvis non necessariò cardinalium, ùt constat ex prænot. 3.) prærequisita per legem positivam, ut conditio, succedentem fundans acceptationem; minimè verò ùt testimonium infallibile, aliàve basis, fundans infallibilitatem acceptationis, fundandam, prout est in fieri, & fundatam jam, prout est in facto esse, in assistentia Spiritûs Sancti.

Ad P. C. 2. Resp. C. A. N. C. Dispar. est: quia acceptatio quidem legis ità fundatur in involuntate[7] principis, ut voluntas legislatoris nullam accipiat vim obligationis per subditorum acceptationem: cùm ejusmodi vis obligandi, posteaquam ipsam per L. regiam transtulère in principem, non competat subditis; acceptatio autem Pontificis ità fundatur in electione Cardinalium, ut electio Cardinalium accipiat aliquam vim revelationis per Ecclesiæ acceptationem: utpote cui appromissa est assistentia infallibilis Spiritûs Sancti, & collata vis applicandi ad illam veritatem universalem, formaliter explicitè revelatam: omnis Pontifex legitimè electus, & pacificè acceptatus, &c. ex eâdemque explicandi istam propositionem singularem, formaliter implicitè in eadem revelatam: hic n. Pontifex est verus Pontifex: aliàs enim posset esse corpus sinè capite, ne dicam corpus sinè corpore, & ruina, non columna veritatis, unà cum capite.

English

not, as the acceptance of the Church is, the last act in which the mind and will of the Church are explicated with respect to her legitimate Head — so much so that, even if the first election by the Cardinals were not legitimate, the second election, that of the Church, would still not be illegitimate or erroneous. Otherwise the Church would be a pit of falsehood rather than the pillar of truth, being deceived in the rule and by consequence also in what is ruled by it; since the certitude of the rule cannot be exceeded by the certitude of the thing ruled, and the Church herself is no rule independently of her Head — except, note well, in accepting him, lest otherwise, together with him, she should be a guiding star for erring. For the rest, not without him but with him she has the force of ruling in all remaining matters.

To the first proof of the consequence. Reply: I distinguish the antecedent. The acceptance of the Church is founded on the election by the Cardinals as on a condition in fact prerrequired by positive law: I concede; as on an infallible testimony, or on some other basis of her infallibility: I deny the antecedent and the consequence. An election does indeed precede (though not necessarily one by the Cardinals, as is clear from note 3), prerrequired by positive law as a condition, and founding the acceptance that follows; but by no means as an infallible testimony, or as some other basis founding the infallibility of the acceptance — an infallibility which is to be founded, as it stands in becoming, and is already founded, as it stands in accomplished being, upon the assistance of the Holy Spirit.

To the second proof of the consequence. Reply: I concede the antecedent, I deny the consequence. The disparity is this: because the acceptance of a law is founded on the will[7] of the prince in such a way that the will of the lawgiver receives no force of obligation from the acceptance by the subjects, since such a force of obliging does not belong to the subjects after they have transferred it to the prince through the lex regia. But the acceptance of a Pontiff is founded on the election by the Cardinals in such a way that the election by the Cardinals receives some force of revelation through the acceptance of the Church, to whom the infallible assistance of the Holy Spirit has been promised, and on whom the power has been conferred of applying that acceptance to that universal truth, formally explicitly revealed, every Pontiff legitimately elected and peacefully accepted, etc., and from it of explicating this singular proposition, formally implicitly revealed in it, this individual Pontiff is a true Pontiff. For otherwise there could be a body

Latin

Ad Confirm. 1. Resp. C. M. N. m. ad causalem dico: quòd, sicut ad divinam spectat providentiam impedire, ne incapax eligatur, sic ad eam spectat etiam, ne incapax retineatur. Unde dico ulterius, quòd factus quidem amens atque adeò comparatus mortuo, (nisi temporanea sit amentia, & non perpetua,) sicut excidit capacitate, sic excidat quoque potestate gubernandi, jure naturali; redditus autem infidelis, juxta aliquos quidem probabiliter eò ipsò depositus est à Christo, qui non vult per lupos pasci agnos; juxta alios tamen probabilius non eò ipsò, sed accedente sententiâ Ecclesiæ, non quidem judicatoriâ, sed declaratoriâ: cùm nullo jure divino legatur id expressatum, quòd Papa factus hæreticus, etiam manifestus, eò ipsò censendus sit depositus esse à Christo; sed bene sicut concessum est Ecclesiæ, proficuum assumere, sic quoque concessum est Ecclesiæ, Caput perniciosum repudiare: & licèt quidem fides necessarium sit fundamentum omnis potestatis Ecclesiasticæ ad meliùs esse; non est tamen necessarium ad simpliciter esse, ùt potestatis ordinis, quemadmodum patet in hæreticis validè ordinantibus, validè consecrantibus, &c: sic potestatis jurisdictionis: & consequenter dum nonnulla Pontificum decreta videntur innuere tales Pontifices infideles ipso jure depositos esse, aut loquuntur de inferioribus, à Papa suam potestatem accipientibus, aut loquendo de summis, à Christo suam potestatem habentibus, intelligendi sunt loqui quoad primum, non verò quoad actum secundum, seu quoad potentialem, non verò quoad actuaalem potestatis Papalis amissionem, in quo etiam sensu verum est Christum nolle à lupis pasci oves; quòd si dicas: Pontifex hæreticus negat implicitè, estò non explicitè, Christum, & Ecclesiam: ergo negat etiam se ipsum, & dignitatem suam. Resp. C. A. D. C. negat se ipsum tanquam membrum, Christo per fidem unitum, in ordine ad justificationem, C. negat se ipsum tanquam instrumentum à Christo assumptum, in ordine ad regimen Ecclesiæ, N. C. tamdiu Papa manet in possessione, quamdiu non accedit declaratio Ecclesiæ, de ejusdem nullitate, ob lapsum in manifestam hæresim; si tamen potest labi in eandem: id, quod à fortiori habet locum in aliis criminibus, ob quæ censet without a head — not to say a body without a body — and, together with its head, a ruin rather than the pillar of truth.

English

To Confirmation 1. Reply: I concede the major, I deny the minor. To the causal clause I say that, as it belongs to divine providence to prevent an incapable man from being elected, so it belongs to it also to prevent an incapable man from being retained. Hence I say further that one who has become insane, and so is reckoned as a dead man (unless the insanity be temporary and not perpetual), just as he falls away from capacity, so also falls away from the power of governing, by natural law. But one who has turned unbeliever is, according to some, probably by that very fact deposed by Christ, who does not will his lambs to be fed by wolves; according to others, however, more probably not by that very fact, but only when the sentence of the Church supervenes, not indeed a judicial but a declaratory one. For it is nowhere read as expressed in divine law that a Pope who has become a heretic, even a manifest one, is by that very fact to be reckoned deposed by Christ; but rather, as it has been granted to the Church to take up a profitable Head, so also it has been granted to the Church to repudiate a pernicious one. And although faith is a necessary foundation of all ecclesiastical power for its better being, it is nevertheless not necessary for its being simply: as it is not necessary for the power of orders, as is plain in heretics who validly ordain, validly consecrate, etc., so neither for the power of jurisdiction. And consequently, when some decrees of the Pontiffs seem to hint that such unbelieving Pontiffs are deposed by the law itself, either they speak of inferiors, who receive their power from the Pope, or, if they speak of the supreme ones, who have their power from Christ, they must be understood to speak as regards the first act and not as regards the second act, that is, as regards a potential and not as regards an actual loss of the papal power. In which sense too it is true that Christ does not will his sheep to be fed by wolves. But if you say: a heretical Pontiff implicitly denies, granted not explicitly, Christ and the Church; therefore he denies himself also and his own dignity — I reply: I concede the antecedent, I distinguish the consequent. He denies himself as a member united to Christ by faith with a view to justification: I concede; he denies himself as an instrument taken up by Christ with a view to the government of the Church: I deny the consequent. The Pope remains in possession as long as there does not supervene a declaration of the Church about his nullity, on account of a lapse into manifest heresy — supposing, that is, that he can lapse into it. And this holds a fortiori in the case of the other crimes on account of which Suárez

Latin

Suarezius non posse Papam conveniri ab Ecclesia, in ordine ad ejusdem depositionem.

Ad Confirm. 2. Resp. C. M. N. m. & D. causalem: in nullo dd. instantium fit nova revelatio formaliter talis C. æquivalenter talis N. causalem m. & C. Dum novus Papa acceptatur ab Ecclesia, eò instanti antiqua, & communis revelatio, applicatur ad novum, & particulare objectum materiale, ità, ut idem Papa, qui ante instans acceptationis erat remotè, in instanti acceptationis fit credibilis, & remaneat post instans acceptationis, proximè, ipsa acceptatione triplex munus exercente, respectu quidem Christi, conditionis, ut conferat neo-electo potestatem Pontificiam, respectu neo-electi, unionis cum veritate prima, tanquam materialis objecti cum formali, & respectu nostri applicationis, neo-electum proponentis, tanquam objectum, non jam remotè, sed proximè credibile, adeò, ut licèt possit irritari prima, non possit ampliùs irritari electio secunda, sed sicut præscriptio, intercedente licèt injuria particulari, facit, ob certitudinem dominii, ut justè possideatur, quod cum bona fide præscribitur, sic acceptatio Ecclesiæ, ob necessariam sibi jure, tam naturali, quàm divino, certitudinem capitis, primam electionem, etiamsi inferiore jure humano injustam, ac invalidam, de jure altiore, naturali nimirum, ac divino, tanquam electio secunda, adjustat, atque convalidat. Quòd si dicas: Ecclesia non potest acceptare electum, nisi sciat legitimè electum; sed h. non potest scire: cùm electores non habeant assistentem sibi infallibiliter Spiritum S. ergo. Resp. D. M. nisi id sciat positivè, & ex principio directo, N. M. nisi id sciat negativè, & ex principio reflexo, C. M. D. eòdem modò m. & concessa causali ejusdem. N. C. Ut Ecclesia acceptet electum, non requiritur, ut possit factam electionem demonstrare legitimam philosophicè, aut theologicè, per medium terminum, naturaliter, aut supernaturaliter certum, atque ità ut sciat id positivè, & ex principio directo; sed sufficit, quòd per prudentes conjecturas constet non esse illegitimam, tametsi esset reipsa, hoc dictamine desuper accedente: qui prudenter omnibus circumstantiis expensis judicatur canonicè electus, is debet acceptari; sed talis judicatur hic n. homo, putà, Cardinalis Laurentius Corsinus, à modo canonicè electus, Pontifex Maximus, Clemens XII. ergo debet acceptari, atque ità ut sciat id negativè, & ex principio reflexo: ad holds that the Pope cannot be arraigned by the Church with a view to his deposition.

English

To Confirmation 2. Reply: I concede the major, I deny the minor, and I distinguish the causal clause: in none of the said instants is a new revelation made that is formally such: I concede; that is equivalently such: I deny it, denying the causal clause of the minor and the consequence. When a new Pope is accepted by the Church, in that instant the ancient and common revelation is applied to a new and particular material object, so that the same Pope who before the instant of acceptance was credible remotely becomes credible in the instant of acceptance, and remains so after the instant of acceptance, proximately; the acceptance itself exercising a threefold office: with respect to Christ, the office of a condition, that he may confer the Pontifical power on the newly elected; with respect to the newly elected, the office of a union with the first truth, as of a material object with the formal one; and with respect to us, the office of an application, proposing the newly elected as an object no longer remotely but proximately credible. And so, although the first election can be annulled, the second election can no longer be annulled; but just as prescription, even though a particular injury intervene, brings it about, on account of the certitude of ownership, that what is prescribed in good faith is justly possessed, so the acceptance of the Church, on account of the certitude of a head necessary to her by law both natural and divine, adjusts and validates the first election — even one unjust and invalid by the lower human law — by the higher law, namely the natural and divine, as being a second election. But if you say: the Church cannot accept the man elected unless she knows that he was legitimately elected; but this she cannot know, since the electors do not have the Holy Spirit infallibly assisting them; therefore — I reply: I distinguish the major. Unless she knows it positively and from a direct principle: I deny the major; unless she knows it negatively and from a reflex principle: I concede the major. I distinguish the minor in the same way, and, the causal clause of the minor being conceded, I deny the consequence. For the Church to accept the man elected, it is not required that she be able to demonstrate the election made to be legitimate, philosophically or theologically, through a middle term naturally or supernaturally certain, and so to know it positively and from a direct principle; but it suffices that by prudent conjectures it be established that the election is not illegitimate, even if in reality it were so, with this dictate supervening: whoever, all circumstances prudently weighed, is judged canonically elected, he must be accepted; but such is this individual quod dum consequitur ipsa demum acceptatio, voce populi, infallibilem Spiritûs Sancti assistentiam habentis, æquivalente voci divinæ, fit talem Pontificem esse de fide.

Latin

67. Objic. VI. Licèt Ecclesia acceptaret aliquem Pontificem illegitimum, nihilominus decreta ejus adhuc essent valida, & Ecclesia teneretur ea credere: ergo. P. A. Pontifex ab Ecclesia pro legitimo habitus, tametsi re ipsa foret illegitimus, nihilominus esset infallibilis in definitionibus: quia tali casu Spiritus S. assisteret Ecclesiæ, in bonum ejusdem: ergo. Confirm. primò: si esset de fide, electum, & acceptatum Pontificem esse verum Pontificem, etiam esset de fide quoad futuros Pontifices; atqui hoc non: quia nescimus an adhuc aliqui sint futuri; cùm incertus sit dies extremi judicii: ergo. Confir. secundò: qui negaret Clementem XII. esse verum Pontificem, non esset propterea hæreticus; sed si esset de fide, Clementem XII. esse verum Pontificem, qui negaret eum esse talem, esset propterea hæreticus: ergo. Confirm. tertiò: tantùm interest Ecclesiæ, veros habere fideles, quantum habere verum Caput; atqui de illis non requiritur certitudo fidei, sed sufficit moralis: ergo & de isto.

Resp. ad argumentum N. A. licèt enim possit communis error suffragari, ut valeant acta putatitij principis politici, juxta L. Barbarius, non potest tamen communis error suffragari, ut valeant acta putatitij Principis Supremi Ecclesiastici; dico: Supremi: quia potest quidem d. error suffragari, ut valeant etiam acta putatitij Pastoris Ecclesiastici non Supremi; disparitas autem inter Principem politicum, & inter Principem Ecclesiasticum, eúmque Supremum, & non Supremum, est: quia Princeps quidem politicus accipit suam potestatem à communitate politica: quæ non habens appromissam Spiritûs S. assistentiam infallibilem, potest quidem putatitium acceptare Principem suum, sed ità tamen, ut, sicut potest legitimo conferre potestatem, sic possit illegitimi valorare acta invalida, uti valoravit Barbarij Philippi: pariter Pastor Ecclesiæ inferior accipit suam jurisdictionem à Pastore ejusdem superiore, ità, ut licèt partialis Ecclesia, non habens pariter infallibilem Spiritûs S. assistentiam, erret in acceptance talis man judged to be, namely Cardinal Lorenzo Corsini, from now on canonically elected Supreme Pontiff, Clement XII; therefore he must be accepted — and so she knows it negatively and from a reflex principle. And when upon this the acceptance itself at last follows, the voice of the people, which has the infallible assistance of the Holy Spirit, being equivalent to the divine voice, it comes about that such a man's being Pontiff is of faith.

English

67. Objection VI. Even if the Church were to accept some illegitimate Pontiff, his decrees would nevertheless still be valid, and the Church would be bound to believe them; therefore. Proof of the antecedent: a Pontiff held by the Church for legitimate, even if in reality he were illegitimate, would nevertheless be infallible in his definitions, because in such a case the Holy Spirit would assist the Church for her own good; therefore. Confirmation 1: if it were of faith that a Pontiff elected and accepted is a true Pontiff, it would also be of faith as regards future Pontiffs; but this is not so, because we do not know whether there will yet be any, since the day of the last judgment is uncertain; therefore. Confirmation 2: one who denied that Clement XII is a true Pontiff would not on that account be a heretic; but if it were of faith that Clement XII is a true Pontiff, one who denied that he is such would on that account be a heretic; therefore. Confirmation 3: it matters as much to the Church to have true faithful as to have a true Head; but concerning the former no certitude of faith is required, and moral certitude suffices; therefore neither is it required concerning the latter.

Reply to the argument: I deny the antecedent. For although a common error can avail to make the acts of a putative political prince valid, according to the law Barbarius, a common error cannot avail to make valid the acts of a putative Supreme ecclesiastical Prince. I say Supreme, because the said error can indeed avail to make valid even the acts of a putative ecclesiastical pastor who is not Supreme. But the disparity between a political prince and an ecclesiastical Prince, and between the latter as Supreme and as not Supreme, is this: a political prince receives his power from the political community, which, not having the infallible assistance of the Holy Spirit promised to it, can indeed accept a putative prince, yet in such a way that, as it can confer power on a legitimate one, so it can validate the invalid acts of an illegitimate one, as it validated the acts of Barbarius Philippus. Likewise an inferior pastor of the Church receives his jurisdiction from a superior pastor of the same Church, so that, although a partial Church, likewise not having the infallible assistance of the Holy Spirit, may err in the acceptance of such an inferior pastor, the superior pastor can still, and will, by the Pastoris inferioris, adhuc possit, & velit Pastor superior, autoritate totalis Ecclesiæ, tali pastori inferiori putatio jurisdictionem conferre, exigente ita salute ovicularum, uti, supposita potestate ordinis, confert defacto potestatem jurisdictionis Parocho, occultè Simoniaci, id, quod datur colligi, à priori quidem ex ratione ipsius superioritatis, seu superioris potestatis, concessæ ad ædificandum, non ad destruendum, à posteriori autem ex eo, quòd non obliget fideles ad repetitionem ministrorum ipsis à tali Pastore putatio actuum jurisdictionalium; Princeps autem Ecclesiasticus, & Pastor Ecclesiæ Supremus, accipit suam potestatem à Christo, tanquam Vicarius à Principali: qui sicut appromisit communitati Ecclesiasticæ infallibilem Spiritûs S. assistentiam quoad acceptandum Caput legitimum, per quod sit visibiliter cum eadem communitate Ecclesiastica, tanquam principale Caput in Vicario, usque ad consummationem sæculi, sic ejusmodi Capiti suo Vicario, ab Ecclesia acceptato, appromisit infallibilem Spiritûs S. assistentiam in definiendis rebus fidei universis, tanquam Petræ, contra quam nec portæ inferi prævalebunt: ac proinde tam parum potest tota, aut quasi tota, communitas Ecclesiastica illegitimum, Principalis Capitis sui, Caput Vicarium acceptare, quàm parum tale Caput acceptatum potest non esse legitimum, aut non acceptatum non esse illegitimum, Hinc ad P. N. suppositum A. quòd possit pro legitimo ab Ecclesia haberi Pontifex illegitimus, nisi cum eversione firmamenti veritatis. Inde etiam ad causalem dico: quòd Spiritus S. sicut non potest sponsæ suæ, Ecclesiæ, in acceptando Capite legitimo, non assistere, tanquam cum qua Christus promisit se mansurum usque ad consummationem sæculi, & quam constituit columnam, & firmamentum veritatis, sic non possit assistere non acceptatæ ab Ecclesia Petræ, atque ita illegitimæ, aut non assistere ab Ecclesia acceptatæ, atque ita jam legitimæ, & non amplius illegitimæ, ut hoc pacto contra eam, tanquam contra legitimam, & non tanquam contra illegitimam, portæ inferiori non prævaleant.

Latin

Ad Confirm. 1. Resp. D. M. si &c: esset hoc etiam de fide quoad futuros, remotè, indeterminatè, & conditionatè, C. proximè, determinatè, & absolutè, N. M. D. pariformiter m. & N. C. Pontificum futurorum veritas est de fide solummodò remotè, & authority of the whole Church, confer jurisdiction on such a putative inferior pastor, the salvation of the little sheep so demanding; as, the power of orders being supposed, he in fact confers the power of jurisdiction on a parish priest who is secretly a simoniac. This may be gathered, a priori indeed from the very nature of superiority, that is, of the superior power, granted for building up and not for destroying, and a posteriori from the fact that he does not oblige the faithful to a repetition of the jurisdictional acts administered to them by such a putative pastor. But the ecclesiastical Prince and Supreme pastor of the Church receives his power from Christ, as a Vicar from his Principal; and as Christ promised to the ecclesiastical community the infallible assistance of the Holy Spirit as regards accepting a legitimate Head, through whom he might be visibly with that same ecclesiastical community, as the principal Head in his Vicar, even to the consummation of the world, so to such a Vicarial Head of his, accepted by the Church, he promised the infallible assistance of the Holy Spirit in defining all matters of faith, as to the Rock against which the gates of hell shall not prevail. And therefore the whole, or as it were the whole, ecclesiastical community can as little accept an illegitimate Vicarial Head of its principal Head as such an accepted Head can fail to be legitimate, or an unaccepted one fail to be illegitimate. Hence to the proof: I deny the supposition of the antecedent, that an illegitimate Pontiff could be held for legitimate by the Church, except with the overthrow of the ground of truth. Hence too, to the causal clause I say that, as the Holy Spirit cannot fail to assist his spouse, the Church, in accepting a legitimate Head — she being the one with whom Christ promised that he would remain to the consummation of the world, and whom he constituted the pillar and ground of truth — so he cannot assist a Rock not accepted by the Church and thus illegitimate, nor fail to assist one accepted by the Church and thus now legitimate and no longer illegitimate; so that in this way the gates of hell may not prevail against her as against a legitimate Rock, and not as against an illegitimate one.

English

To Confirmation 1. Reply: I distinguish the major. If it were of faith, etc., this would also be of faith as regards future Pontiffs remotely, indeterminately, and conditionally: I concede; proximately, determinately, and absolutely: I deny the major. I distinguish the minor in like fashion, and conditionatè: si nempe fuerint legitimè electi, & pacificè acceptati, idque indeterminatè, persona & nomine defacto incognitis; præsentis verò Pontificis, Clementis XII. veritas est de fide, ut proximè, sic determinatè, & absolutè: quia jam est legitimè electus, & pacificè ab Ecclesia acceptatus, atque adeò per ipsam acceptationem virtualiter revelatus, non quidem prout virtualis revelatio accipitur pro aliquo objecto virtualiter tantùm contento, in formaliter explicitè revelato, sed prout virtualis revelatio accipitur pro testimonio etiam operis, quod in his circumstantiis æquivalet loquelæ divinæ.

Latin

Ad Confir. 2. Resp. D. M. non esset hæreticus materialis, N. M. formalis, subd: non penetrata inculpabiliter revelatione divina, C. penetrata sufficienter, aut non penetrata culpabiliter revelatione divina, N. M. D. proportionaliter m. & N. C. Qui negaret regnantem p. t. Pontificem, legitimè electum, & pacificè acceptatum, &c. esse verum Pontificem, materialis quidem esset revera hæreticus: quia negaret objectum, re ipsa sufficienter à DEO revelatum; si tamen aut non penetraret talem Pontificem esse formaliter implicitè revelatum, aut censeret talem revelationem non sufficere ad fidem, idque inculpabiliter, non esset omnino hæreticus formalis: quia hoc casu, licèt adsit quidem sufficiens revelatio, non esset tamen sufficienter proposita, & consequenter abesset pertinacia: ac proinde taliter negans talem Pontificem esse verum Pontificem, licèt non excusaretur à materiali, excusaretur tamen ab hæresi formali.

Quòd si urgeas, & dicas: si esset de fide sedentem p. t. Pontificem esse verum Pontificem, tanquam objectum re ipsa sufficienter à DEO revelatum, contraria sententia non tolleraretur ab Ecclesia; atqui tolleratur: ergo. Resp. D. M. si esset de fide sedentem p. t. Pontificem esse verum Pontificem, tanquam veritas explicitè revelata, & per aliquam fidei regulam proposita, non tolleraretur sententia contraria, C. M. si esset de fide sedentem p. t. Pontificem esse verum Pontificem, tanquam veritas implicitè solùm revelata, & per discursum tantùm proposita, non tolleraretur sententia contraria, N. M. T. m. N. C. Cùm revelationes formaliter implicitæ, quæ tales, non proponantur per

English

I deny the consequence. The truth of future Pontiffs is of faith only remotely and conditionally, namely if they shall have been legitimately elected and peacefully accepted, and this indeterminately, their person and name being in fact unknown. But the truth of the present Pontiff, Clement XII, is of faith as proximately, so determinately and absolutely, because he is already legitimately elected and peacefully accepted by the Church, and therefore virtually revealed through the acceptance itself — not indeed as virtual revelation is taken for some object only virtually contained in what is formally explicitly revealed, but as virtual revelation is taken for a testimony of deed as well, which in these circumstances is equivalent to divine speech.

To Confirmation 2. Reply: I distinguish the major. He would not be a material heretic: I deny the major; a formal heretic: I subdistinguish — the divine revelation not having been penetrated, and this inculpably: I concede; the divine revelation having been sufficiently penetrated, or not penetrated culpably: I deny the major. I distinguish the minor proportionally, and I deny the consequence. One who denied that the Pontiff reigning for the time being, legitimately elected and peacefully accepted, etc., is a true Pontiff would in truth be a material heretic, because he would deny an object in reality sufficiently revealed by God. If, however, he either did not penetrate that such a Pontiff is formally implicitly revealed, or judged that such a revelation does not suffice for faith, and this inculpably, he would not at all be a formal heretic; because in this case, although a sufficient revelation is indeed present, it would nevertheless not have been sufficiently proposed, and consequently pertinacity would be absent. And therefore one who in this way denies that such a Pontiff is a true Pontiff, although he would not be excused from material heresy, would nevertheless be excused from formal heresy.

But if you press the point and say: if it were of faith that the Pontiff sitting for the time being is a true Pontiff, as an object in reality sufficiently revealed by God, the contrary opinion would not be tolerated by the Church; but it is tolerated; therefore — I reply: I distinguish the major. If it were of faith that the Pontiff sitting for the time being is a true Pontiff as a truth explicitly revealed and proposed through some rule of faith, the contrary opinion would not be tolerated: I concede the major. If it were of faith that the Pontiff sitting for the time being is a true Pontiff as a truth only implicitly revealed and proposed only through discourse, the contrary opinion would not be tolerated: I deny the major. Let the minor pass; I deny the consequence. Since formally implicit revelations, as such, are not proposed aliquam fidei regulam, putà, per scripturam, aut traditionem, &c: sed solùm per discursum, Ecclesia dissimulat, ut in scholis disputetur de iis in utramque partem, an sint, aut non sint de fide? & ratio dissimulandi est: quia ejusmodi discursus proponens revelationem implicitam, potest apparenter quidem esse demonstrativus, veraciter autem parallogisticus; itèm potest quidem penetrari ab uno, non autem ab altero; insuper potest esse convenientia in re, & disconvenientia tantùm in voce, quemadmodum videtur hic contingere: quia Arii admittunt Pontifici potestatem definiendi res fidei, & nobis videtur hæc potestas esse forma moralis, veri Pontificis constitutiva: atque ità, non re, sed voce, discrepamus. Neque hæc jurgia scholastica tanti sunt momenti, ut iis summus Ecclesiæ Pastor in sua præsideat Cathedra. Cæterùm dixi: T. m. quia licèt VV. oppositam docuerint sententiam, seu disputativè, seu assertivè, à tempore nihilominus Clementis VIII. ut innuebam in conclusione, nemo, teste Oviedo, ausus est ex RR. oppositum docere, præsertim attentis Conciliis, in eadem conclusione relatis, ità, ut videatur revera Ariorum sententia non ampliùs esse tollerata ab Ecclesia.

Latin

Ad Confir. 3. Resp. D. M. tantum interest Ecclesiæ veros habere fideles in communi, C. M. in particulari, N. M. D. eodem modò m. & N. C. Sicut de fide est, veram dari Ecclesiam, tanquam corpus, sic de fide est, veros dari fideles, tanquam membra, & verum Pontificem, tanquam Caput, in communi; quoad fideles autem, & quoad Pontificem, in particulari, disparitas est ex natura regulæ fidei, quæ non solùm in communi, sed etiam in particulari debet nota esse, ut fideles valeant cum ea sensibilibiter communicare: idque proportionatâ utique notitiâ, non naturali, se statui elevationis supernaturali, ac proinde pariter non naturali, sed notitiâ supernaturali, notitiâ nimirum fidei,

BLOCK B — Two later excerpts

(a) printed 158

[Subsectio VI, Articulus III, “An, & quale detur augmentum Fidei Theologicæ objectorum materialium?”; inside § 128 (“Dico:

English

through any rule of faith, for instance through Scripture or tradition, etc., but only through discourse, the Church looks the other way, so that in the schools the question may be disputed on both sides, whether such revelations are or are not of faith. And the reason for so looking the other way is this: because such a discourse, proposing an implicit revelation, can be apparently demonstrative but in truth paralogistic; likewise it can be penetrated by one man and not by another; moreover there can be agreement in the thing and disagreement only in the word, as seems to happen here. For the Adversaries [Arii, that is, Adversarii] grant to the Pontiff the power of defining matters of faith, and to us this power seems to be the moral form constitutive of a true Pontiff; and so we differ not in the thing but in the word. Nor are these scholastic quarrels of such moment that the supreme pastor of the Church should preside over them from his chair. For the rest, I said: let the minor pass; because, although the older authors [VV.] taught the opposite opinion, whether by way of disputation or by way of assertion, nevertheless from the time of Clement VIII, as I intimated in the conclusion, no one among the more recent authors [RR.] has dared, on Oviedo’s testimony, to teach the opposite, especially in view of the Councils cited in the same conclusion; so that the opinion of the Adversaries seems in truth to be no longer tolerated by the Church.

To Confirmation 3. Reply: I distinguish the major. It matters as much to the Church to have true faithful in general: I concede the major; in particular: I deny the major. I distinguish the minor in the same way, and I deny the consequence. As it is of faith that there is a true Church, as a body, so it is of faith that there are true faithful, as members, and a true Pontiff, as Head, in general. But as regards the faithful, and as regards the Pontiff, in particular, there is a disparity arising from the nature of the rule of faith, which must be known not only in general but also in particular, so that the faithful may be able to communicate with it sensibly; and this by a knowledge duly proportioned, not natural, but supernatural to the state of elevation, and therefore likewise not natural but a supernatural knowledge, namely the knowledge of faith,

BLOCK B — Two later excerpts

(a) printed 158

[Subsection VI, Article III, “Whether, and of what kind, there is any increase of the material objects of Theological Faith?”; inside § 128 (“I say: the Substantialia quidem Fidei Theologicæ objecta materialia...”), which begins on printed p. 156 (PDF 172).]

Latin

Confirm: Multæ veritates definitæ sunt in Conciliis, quæ prius non erant de fide, nisi secundum implicitum, ut Christum esse consubstantialem Patri, habere duas voluntates, quod B. V. nunquam peccaverit venialiter, quod justificatio fiat per intrinsecam qualitatem, seu inhærentem gratiam, & non per puram imputationem extrinsecam, &c. Itē multis SS. ut legere est in eorum vitis approbatis, tam viris, quàm fœminis, factæ sunt revelationes privatae non paucæ, earumque aliæ quidem juxta, aliæ autem præter, licet non contra, substantialia fidei Theologicæ objecta materialia, ac etiam accidentalia cætera, jam aliàs revelata, ita, quod non fuerint in iis contentæ, seu ratione materialis, seu ratione objecti formalis, atque adeo ne implicitè quidem creditæ. Itē multa objecta contingentia, quæ Apostolorum tempore implicabantur in communi, & non credebantur nisi implicitè, successorum tempore explicantur in particulari, & creduntur explicitè, ut Sac. Concilium Trident. esse verum Concilium, Hodiernum Clementem XII. legitimè electum, & pacificè acceptatum, esse verum Pontificem: ergo.

(b) printed 166

[Subsectio VI, Articulus III; inside the Resp. of § 136 (“Objic. IV. contra p. 4. & 5. In Ecclesia nullæ sunt revelationes novæ...”), at the reply to Confirm. 2.]

Adhuc SS. Apostolis manet sua prærogativa, quod ipsi non solum intellexerint scripturas, & omnia fidei nostræ mysteria, quæ ad traditionem pertinent, sed insuper quod hæc intellexerint cum excellentia, seu cum modo quodam intensionis singulari, & perfectione fidei, perspicientes v. g. substantiam panis non manere in Eucharistia, omnem D. Petro legitimè successorum, fore verum Pontificem, omne Concilium legitimè congregatum fore verum Concilium, &c: substantial material objects of Theological Faith indeed...”), which begins on printed p. 156 (PDF 172).]

English

Confirmation: Many truths have been defined in Councils which previously were not of faith except according to the implicit: as that Christ is consubstantial with the Father, that he has two wills, that the Blessed Virgin never sinned venially, that justification comes about through an intrinsic quality, that is, through inherent grace, and not through a pure extrinsic imputation, etc. Likewise to many saints, as may be read in their approved lives, both men and women, not a few private revelations have been made; and of these some were in accordance with, others beside — though not against — the substantial material objects of Theological Faith, and also the other accidental ones already revealed elsewhere, in such a way that they were not contained in those objects, either by reason of the material or by reason of the formal object, and therefore were not even implicitly believed. Likewise many contingent objects, which in the time of the Apostles were implied in general and were believed only implicitly, are in the time of their successors explicated in particular and believed explicitly: as that the sacred Council of Trent is a true Council, and that today’s Clement XII, legitimately elected and peacefully accepted, is a true Pontiff; therefore.

(b) printed 166

[Subsection VI, Article III; inside the Reply of § 136 (“Objection IV, against parts 4 and 5. In the Church there are no new revelations...”), at the reply to Confirmation 2.]

Still the holy Apostles retain their prerogative, that they not only understood the Scriptures and all the mysteries of our faith that belong to tradition, but moreover that they understood these with excellence, that is, with a certain singular mode of intensity and perfection of faith, discerning, for example, that the substance of bread does not remain in the Eucharist, that everyone who shall legitimately succeed blessed Peter will be a true Pontiff, that every Council legitimately assembled will be a true true Council, etc.